Young authors visit 'Boro

As many as 500 elementary school children in Murfreesboro and Rutherford County - future Stephen Kings and R.L. Stines will share their original writings with one another and with three visiting professional authors at MTSU's Third Annual Young Authors' Conference.

"The conference is intended to promote a love of reading and writing," said Bobbie Solley, associate professor of elementary and special education and cocoordinator of the conference. "We hope exposing the children to real authors and having them feel like real authors will promote literacy."

The event will take place 8 a.m.-noon Saturday, April 25, at Central Middle School

Improvement honored

Chi Alpha Epsilon, a new honor society for students who started college in an academic assistance program and have maintained a 3.0 GPA for at least two semesters, will induct its first members Saturday, April 25.

The ceremony will take place at 1 p.m. in the Suntrust Room of the Business and Aerospace building. It is open only to members of the society, developmental studies faculty and inductees and their families.

Inductees are Joseph Debusk, Veronica McCullough, James McFadden, Kimberly Mitchell, Phonvilay Panyanouvong and Leslie Wormer.

Guitarists perform Bach

The music of Bach performed on guitar is the theme of three nusical events to be held on the MTSU campus April 24-25.

The MTSU Guitar Studio Concert will feature Bach's Cello Suite No. 1, Lute suite No.1, Cello Suite No. 3 and Lute Suite No. 4 at 8 p.m. Friday. Performers for the night will be John Nichols, Mike Theimann, Alex Elder and Christopher Dorsey.

Stanley Yates and Mary Akerman will conduct a master class from noon until 3 p.m. Saturday, April 25. The final event in the series will be the Faculty and Guest Artist Concert at 8 p.m. Saturday, featuring Yates, Akerman and Bill Yelverton, associate professor of

All three events will be free and open to the public. They will be held in the Music Hall of Wright Music Building. For more information call 898-5623.

Police round up suspects

ATHENS, Tenn. (AP) - Police are rounding up 52 suspects named in more than 100 drug-related indictments.

Thirty-four of the 52 had been arrested by late Wednesday afternoon. The arrests, which began Tuesday night, were made at the homes of suspected drug dealers and at sites of suspected drug transactions. Police chief Chuck Ziegler said the charges include sale and possession of methamphetamine, crack cocaine and marijuana. Undercover officers made numerous drug buys between last June and last December, he said.

Those arrested were making bond, Ziegler said.

He said he hoped all arrests would be completed by the end of the weekend.

do the job. Lawson agrees.

"I've got a lot of people behind me, a lot of support and a lot of ideas," Lawson said. "The things that I'm proposing are realistic ideas, so we're going to make some real

Durham said he is anxious to work with Lawson in the next week and "show him the ropes."

Lawson received almost 66 percent of the votes — which might constitute a landslide if more than 3 percent of the Lawson, who spent a semester as a House of Representatives member, a year as a senator, a year as senate pro-tem and two years working for State Representative Bart Gordon, said that he felt he had an advantage over the other five candidates for the position.

"I feel that I was the most candidate experienced running," he said.

There were also some candidates for senators in the runoff. Kristie Burton won as senator for the college of education and Jeff Jones won the college of graduate studies senator seat.

racuity Senate looks ahead

☐ Jamie Evans staff

This year's Faculty Senate has met for the last time but Jerry Brookshire, the next Faculty Senate president, is already preparing for the

"The most important thing the Faculty Senate does is ensure faculty governance," Brookshire said. "A lot of things are not just what is done one particular year by one particular president of the senate. It's an ongoing thing."

Christian Haseleu, the current Faculty Senate president, said that he believes Brookshire will do a great job leading the Faculty Senate next year.

"He's very thoughtful and knowledgeable about the way the university works," Haseleu said. "He has a real concern for the faculty."

The Faculty Senate has two main purposes Haseleu said.

One thing it does is make recommendations to administration, the provost and the university president.

"Our president is very much a participatory governance president," Haseleu said. "He believes that everybody should participate in the way the university runs and he listens when the senate speaks and is very supportive of the senate."

This is important, according to Haseleu, because he said it has not always been that way at MTSU and it is certainly not that way throughout the Tennessee Board of Regents

This was the case early this year at Austin Peay State University when its Faculty Senate gave a vote of no confidence toward its university

Haseleu said that MSTU's senate stepped in to observe the events to ensure it was handled properly.

"We did what we could to make sure all side were heard and that the senate's opinion was respected,"

Gift of life touches university

Student recounts miracle heart transplant

☐ Jamie Evans/staff

Eddie Dorris walks three miles a day, works part time and is a full-time student.

So, what makes him so different from others students at MTSU? The constant fear of dying from a common infection.

He doesn't have AIDs; he is one of thousands or Americans who have survived a heart transplant.

Over the scar on his chest he wears a green ribbon to symbolize his support for the organ donor program. His goal is to save the lives of other patients who are waiting for vital organs by getting more people to join the program.

This week is National Organ and Tissue Donor

Awareness Week and organizations like the United Network for Organ Sharing (UNOS) are desperately attempting to recruit more people to join their

During 1997, 5,447 patients nationwide received organ transplants. Unfortunately, 4,372 Americans were not that lucky. They died before a compatible organ donor could be found.

At the end last year, 58,673 patients were still on a waiting list for an organ donor and 4,048 of those were waiting for a heart. More will join them if more donors are not found.

Dorris was one of the lucky ones.

It all started for him in 1994 when he caught pneumonia. After the doctors ran several tests on him, they discovered that his heart was enlarged and beating rapidly.

They concluded that a virus had attacked his heart several years before when he was still in high school and it hadn't been detected until the pneumonia set in.

He spent the next month in the hospital and in denial, refusing to believe that he needed a transplant. He was released from the hospital and put on a waiting list of 2-3 years.

Meanwhile, Dorris went back to school part time. He was on medication and was instructed not to do any activity that would strain his heart.

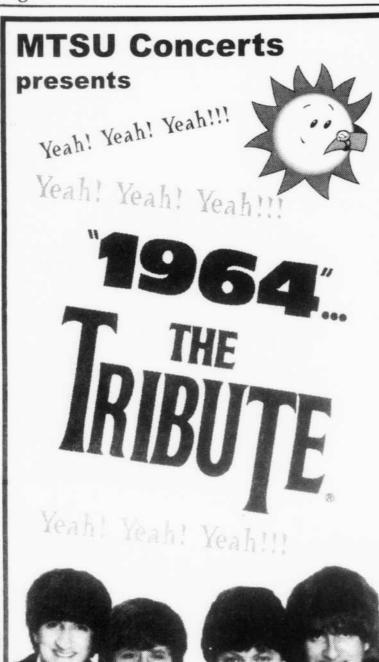

"I was home taking medication, coming to school part time and waiting for a heart to be found,"

In October of 1996, tragedy struck again. Dorris' gall bladder became infected and his heart stopped. He was hospitalized again while his gall bladder was removed. After that, his heart was only working at seven percent of what a normal heart would. He had to stay in the hospital until a donor

In February of 1997, his heart stopped again. The doctors operated and placed a machine, called a left ventricle assistance device (LVAD), inside of him to take over the work of the heart. This new machine had only been approved by the FDA a year earlier.

"If the LVAD wouldn't have been approved," Dorris said, "there would have been nothing they could have done to save me.'

After that, he couldn't do anything but wait - again, His chances of surviving were less than 50 percent.

"It's a horrible feeling," he said. "You don't know if you going to have that tomorrow or if you will ever be able to live your dreams."

He stayed that way for eight months, until finally, in May of 1997, a compatible heart was found.

Dorris was in surgery for ten hours, but afterwards the anxiety and the nightmare

Since that time, he has returned to school and spends. his extra time going to seminars to tell his story. He visits with transplant candidates and helps them deal with their depression.

"When you are diagnosed with this problem, you feel like you're the only one going through it," Dorris said. "It's a long, cruel wait.

"It's a year-round thing for me. I don't just wait for this

He said that people have reservations about becoming

For one, they think that if they are a donor, their body will be so disfigured that it will be impossible to have an opencasket funeral.

According to UNOS and Dorris, this is only a myth.

Another myth is that if a person is a donor and is in a life-or-death situation, the doctor will not try to save him.

There are laws that protect donors which state that the donor must be legally brain dead before they are even considered as a donor.

"They stop at nothing to save you," Dorris said, "but once you're brain dead, there's nothing they can do."

Members of UNOS also said that it is not enough to just sign a donor card to become a donor. The person must also inform their family of their intentions so, in the case of death, it is clear.

"I was very lucky that I got a heart," Dorris said. "There are patients that do not get a heart.

"There would be more people to donate an organ if they understood the need and how many people are waiting."

dedicated her life to working toward women's rights, Barnett is the focus of the last honors lecture of the semester, which will be given by Bonnie Shipp of the English department.

spoke Barnett especially for African-American women's rights and against the practice of lynching. She started off writing for a church and later began writing for a black newspaper in 1889, which was then called, "Free Speech and Headline." Not only was Barnett a writer for this paper (which later became "The Free Speech"), she also served as coowner and editor.

"My focus is how she used this paper," Shipp said.

Shipp will also discuss to leave Memphis," Shipp said. Barnett's life. She said she obstacles she overcame, including caring for six or seven younger siblings after her parents died. Barnett also had to educate herself.

Barnett went on to become one of the founding members of the NAACP, but was given the position of secretary because she was a woman.

"She was also one of the first overseas correspondent," Shipp said. Barnett lived in Memphis, Tenn., but wanted to leave because of the injustice there. "She urged all black people

But she never let this stop her. She remained active until her death in her 70s.

Shipp has a bachelor's degree from Lemoyne-Owen and a master's degree from Tennessee State University. She is currently working on her dissertation at Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. She has read at the American Women Writers of Color Conference and the Southern Conference on African-American Studies. She has also been involved in the Women's Leadership Conference here on campus. Two years ago, she was elected 'Sponsor of the Year" by the Ebony Achievement Award Committee.

Haseleu said. "We wanted to make sure they were not overridden by the university president or anything like that."

The other role of the Faculty Senate communication, Haseleu said.

"There are things the administration would like to know and the Senate is a conduit for that kind of communication," Haseleu said.

Also, if not for the senate, a faculty member with a concern would have to go to the chair of the department. The concern would have then have to go to the dean of the college, then to the provost and finally to the president. The senate acts as a forum which allows the faculty to communicate with the university president without having to go through the chain of command.

In the last year, the Faculty Senate has created a Public Safety Advisory Committee, worked on revising the faculty equity model, created a smoking policy committee which will vote on a new smoking policy next semester and voted on revising the teacher evaluation form.

The first meeting of the next senate will be on June 8. Brookshire said that he has some issues he would like to present to the Faculty Senate but he wants to wait to reveal them until the first meeting.

Editorials

SGA improvement

Scotty Lawson will begin his reign as student body president at Monday's SGA banquet.

This time of year is generally a period of great transition within the SGA. It is a time to reflect on past accomplishments and foreshadow the possibilities to come.

A small portion of the campus population has selected its incoming top official. Now the effort must be focused on setting the agenda.

Human beings are notorious for following the path cleared for easiest travel.

And SGA must clear that path if our community is ever to set foot on it.

Publicizing meeting dates and locations on a regular basis is an excellent starting point. Students are incapable of caring about something they barely know exists.

Another novel venture SGA could undergo would be to insist that only well-though-out and researched legislation could be voted on during meetings.

Lawson would be wise to demand that senators and representatives do their homework and quit wasting time. It seems at times that the SGA itself does not even know what it can and can't actually accomplish.

There is also a great need for senators and representatives to thrust themselves and their ideas into public light. It is well known that this campus is full of apathetic, luke-warm bodies. It is up to the SGA to set an example of in-your-face effort.

Shaking hands and making promises are all good and dandy, but the election is over and now the work begins.

Students must have a face to place a name with as well. A suggestion table with a real, live SGA member to take complaints and offer recommendations on how a situation could be better handled would surely help.

The SGA needs to lead, not follow. Different methods and ideas must be attempted before they can ever approach fruition. Never should our government think that enough work has been

The reason people don't vote is because they don't know who they are voting for or why it would do any good in the first place.

Good luck.

Student encourages personal discovery of Beaumont

To the editor:

A few modest notions which should stimulate some introspection into our own actions:

Perhaps this essay is a little too late in preserving the best interests of our student body, but having an understanding of human nature, I know that individuals are fixed in their beliefs and heavily influenced by tabloids which illustrate and usually exaggerate the personal imperfections of the lives of other hman beings. I once thought that immaturity, inhumanity and the savage hunger to know and believe depictions of the mistakes and sufferings of the private lives of prominent individuals was an adolescent fixation with tragedy that diminished when people matured an (sic) entered their years of college. I assumed that all minds mature and people learn to differentiate between important, relevant issues and ignorant, narrow-minded trash. I once believed that we humans could be humble enough to realize that we are all imperfect, and that not one of us is right to compare our actions to the actions of others and let those actions alone influence our opinions of an individual. In my opinion, we are all savage minded, driven by selfishness, lust and desire. We are compulsive liars and we justify all of our actions in order to prove to ourselves how much better we are

After seeing how America reacted to the Clinton headlines about "sexscandals" (sic), I realized that a sickening percentage of people are not intelligent enough to decipher between right/wrong, moral/immoral and important/insignificant. Should I have expected more from a university student body? Perhaps not. The nature of man is to highlight the faults of others and condemn them, and the truth is, all of our lives are equally filled with mistakes, immoral decisions and tragedies. We love to point the finger and play God, but when we make the wrong decisions, we justify them or ignore them. Not one of us has the right to judge one's actions as better or worse than one's

It saddens me to see how easily an "intellectual" community was persuaded by the irrelevant, tabloid article (which was printed in 'Sidelines") about Jeff Beaumont. Assuming that all the accusations are true, is this not a reflection of our own lives? Do we all not make mistakes? Before you enter a stubborn state of denial, ask yourself if the most secret stories of your personal life, when dramatized and exaggerated, would not be equally disturbing? In destroying the profile and name of another, we are only denying to ourselves that our lives have perhaps been lead (sic) no better.

Were you going to vote for Jeff? Did you not vote for Jeff solely because of an article you read in "Sidelines" or a rumor one of your peers was slinging into an "intellectual, relevant, college-level discussion?" If so, I forgive you, because all of us make mistakes; our lives are not lived to the definitions of "moral," "ethical," "intelligent" or "civilized." I believe we strive to live in accordance to (sic) these idealistic definitions, and I hope we can learn from our mistakes in order to better ourselves. Bettering ourselves. however, does not begin by condemning the lives of others, and I hope this is reflected by our actions

Is it not a great leader (sic) an individual who empathizes with the concerns of the student body, who is driven to accept the responsibility and challenge of satisfying the many needs of a diverse community and who successfully produces results which clearly reflect a positive spirit of dedication and unselfishness? I understand what qualities are expected in leader (sic), but I also understand that to go beyond those normal expectations, to unceasingly exert oneself in the interest of others, to eagerly confront challenge and to confidently encourage positive changes is to demonstrate the characteristics of an outstanding leader. I am proud to support an individual whose leadership qualities, social skills andachievements are outstanding and especially evident at Middle Tennessee State University. With total confidence, I believe Jeff Beaumont, an exceptional student at MTSU, prominent figure in the Student Government and resident of Area IV, has proven to this university that his leadership skills are outstanding and his past accomplishments are reflective of this. He motivates individuals as well as groups to seek not only an outlet for their ideas but the productivity for results. Jeff Beaumont is, perhaps,

Equality does not exist

Adam Bowers CPS

There is a misconception raging in this country. When people talk about democracy or freedom, they too often use the word "equality." People, especially liberals, use this word to describe the ideal for America's future. The ideal is not so much "liberty and justice for all" as it is "not just equal opportunity, but a uniform sameness among Americans.' Let me offer the following idea. It is something that I believe very strongly and feel is central to what we are talking about: People who are equal are not free, and people who are free are not equal. In a society that values the free market and capitalism, some people will excel and become successful, and others will remain

This does not mean that we ignore the fact that poor people exist. If you can get through all the liberal ranting in the newspapers, you will find that at getting people back to work. Soon, those opportunities that have never been available to those people who simply collected welfare from the government, will help improve lives.

In a society where nobody needs to go hungry, we must continue to be charitable in our actions and in how much we give. If we tell the government that it must not support us, we must still remain sensitive to those who are truly in need.

However, I do not believe in "equality." I think that people who do are making a mistake. In fact, when I hear people talking about equality, I think about the communist and socialist systems that have failed or are failing miserably. Central to communism is the idea that "equality" is paramount; no person should have more or earn more than another person, and freedom is secondary to equality. In the process, people are stripped from the natural incentive to welfare reform is working wonderfully succeed because there is never the opportunity for an improvement in living conditions. In these societies, innovation is treated with disdain and countries quickly become backward after years of little or no technological improvement.

Furthermore, people are not equal. People take the phrase, "all men are created equal," to mean something completely different than what it was intended. People forget that the rest of this statement is, "and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, and among these rights are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

What does this mean? It means that the Creator is not ultimately concerned about how much money your parents left you when they died or what kind of car you drive or what race you are. Each of us was created with talents that can be used to improve ourselves, and the means to succeed, live, cherish liberty and

I have a confession to make: I like Joe Camel and those cool Camel Red boxes of cigarettes that look like they're from the 1930s. I also love the Marlboro man, even though I'm not a cowgirl. And you know what? I don't even smoke.

What does this not mean? It does not mean that everyone is the same, and should have the same talents or the same amount of money. It does not mean that some people should be punished because they did work hard and other people should be favored because they did not. It does not mean that people should use any disability or disadvantage as an excuse for not trying and not striving to be the best they can be. Student Government Association Middle Tennessee State University years that smoking causes lung as people get older, they begin can be explained in one word:

Recent studies show that American tobacco consumption has declined and more people are kicking the habit. However, smoking is increasingly popular among teenagers. In a study released this month, the Centers for Disease Control and Atlanta Prevention in announced that 30 percent more teens smoke today compared to six years ago.

Using these statistics and the leaked news that tobacco companies may have marketed to teenagers in past years, politicians decided tobacco should pay up.

The money supposedly would go toward programs aimed at curbing teen smoking, specifically anti-smoking ads and public health campaigns. The deal would include sending both positive and voluntary restrictions on smoking advertisements that might encourage teenagers to take up the habit.

This idea makes sense, and I generally agree teen smoking is a bad idea (both Republicans and Democrats realized that no one really favors teen smoking). However, I have trouble understanding how billions of dollars will keep teens from

The question simply comes down to this: Would you rather live in the oppression of equality or the opportunity of freedom? Our society always offers the tools to improve lives as long as an individual is willing to work and become responsible for him or herself. There are very few people in our country, especially in today's economy, that work and toil for nothing. Most people that work find at least moderate success, if not great success, despite

It's been 15 years of success for the members of Diamond Rio and Saturday night their careers came full circle.

One of the most celebrated vocal groups in country music, Diamond Rio, became official members of the Grand Ole Opry with their performance at the Opry in front of an international television audience Saturday.

"We are very honored to be the newest member of the Grand Ole Opry," said lead vocalist Marty Roe. 'It's something all of us have dreamed about. We're honored to be here and we want to carry out the tradition of the

Not bad for a group of guys who started out their career in the early '80s performing as an attraction at Opryland, U.S.A. as the Tennessee River Boys.

However, known to much of the world as Diamond Rio, they've gone on to record four platinum albums since signing with Arista/Nashville in 1990

Diamond Rio is one of the finest young groups in country music today," said Grand Ole Opry President and General Manager Bob Whittaker. "Each member is an accomplished artist and together they are producing some tremendous young country sounds.

"These guys have made frequent guest appearances on the show in recent years to demonstrate their commitment to the Opry and to country music. They will inject their own unique blend of energy into the Opry and will help us move the show into the next century.'

The group was invited by Whittaker when they last appeared on the Opry stage March 14. Diamond Rio became the 83rd official members and the first group since The Whites joined in 1984.

After a brief induction speech from Little Jimmy Dickens, Roe said the group wanted to take it back to the song that got their career started "Meet in the Diamond Rio then closed its two- song performance with an old fashioned, one mic, slow tempo, harmonized ballad "Tennessee."

The group is made up of original members Roe, Dan Truman and Jimmy Orlando, who all performed as part of the Tennessee River Boys, as well as Brian Prout, Gene Johnson and Dana Williams, the nephew of Opry stars and bluegrass legends The Osbourne Brothers.

Aside from four Grammy nominations Diamond Rio has won four Country Music Association Vocal Group of the Year awards (1992, 1993, 1994 and 1997), two Academy of Country Music trophies as Top Vocal Group (1991 and 1992) and four Radio and Records Vocal Group of the Year honors (1992-95).

The month of April could still yield more recognition for the group. Diamond Rio was nominated for three ACM Awards that were presented April 22, including Vocal Group/Duo of the Year, Single of the Year for "How Your Love Makes Me Feel" and Video of the Year for the same song.

'Paulie' not typical animal fare

Jared Wilson The Movie Guy

"If I could talk to the animals..." So goes the Oscar winning song from 1967's "Dr. Dolittle." But what if the animals could talk to us? Hollywood's nearly used up that formula with plenty of forgettable kid flicks, but the Oscar-nominated film "Babe" just may have revived what was mostly a direct-to-video enterprise. The most current release is "Paulie," the story of a talking parrot who bonds with his child owner only to be given away. The rest of the movie is predictable enough: Paulie Japanese director Akira encounters people from all walks of life throughout his journey home. Sound familiar? That's because this plot is standard "talking animal" fare. The movie itself, however, is

The writers give Paulie genuinely funny wisecracks, and the result is not unlike that achieved by Jim Henson's early Muppet movies. The picture will entertain children without alienating adults. supporting cast keeps the film interesting, as well. Jay Mohr, a Saturday Night Live alum who may be best remembered man using Paulie for his own gain. (Mohr also provides the voice of Paulie.) Other appearances by Gena Rowlands, Cheech Marin and Hackett unimpressive given their abilities, but they are far from disappointing.

The jokes are fresh and funny, but there's not enough of them, and though "Paulie" sustains interest, it cannot be described as unique. The best comparison would be to say that "Paulie" is like a parrot with clipped wings: it's nice to look at, but it never flies.

My video picks for the week are two films from acclaimed Kurosawa. Kurosawa's work, at the least, is phenomenal, and his art has inspired several Western imitations. His "Seven Samurai" prompted America's "The Magnificent Seven," and George Lucas has said that Kurosawa's "The Hidden Fortress" inspired his story for "Star Wars.

My first recommendation is "Yojimbo," about a vagabond samurai (Toshiro Mifune) who wanders into a village where two rival merchants have staked their claim. Each merchant has his own gang, and they have nearly decimated as the wicked Bob Sugar in the town with their struggle for "Jerry Maguire," gives a nice power. Mifune, as the nameless turn as Benito, a hapless con- hero, plays each side against in a riddle inside an enigma"? the other, tricking them into destroying each other.

Part of Kurosawa's purpose in creating "Yojimbo" was to satirize the "seibu-geki," which is the Japanese term for the mindless American Western, and as a parody, his film is topnotch. But it is so innovative, that it even inspired a remake - Sergio Leone's spaghetti Western, "A Fistful of Dollars," which starred Clint Eastwood in the Mifune role.

Even on a non-comedic level, though, "Yojimbo" is a riveting film. Kurosawa treats man's indecision on a deeply complex level. Mifune must choose between two evils, and not to choose at all, deciding to be selfish, would be just as bad. There is no easy way out. Even good deeds bring punishment. These are just a few facets of "Yojimbo," a tragi-comic story where finding good in a world of evil is like finding the needle in the proverbial haystack.

The next Kurosawa film is Rashomon," in which four people give four very different accounts of an incident involving a bandit's attack on a nobleman and his wife. The film appears simplistic upon initial viewing and taken at face value, but it is really a labyrinth of ideas. Remember Joe Pesci's famous line from That's "Rashomon." It's a cinematic M.C. Escher drawing.

Kurosawa's abstract fable seems to be a commentary on human understanding. There are as many perspectives of an event as there are witnesses to it, and so, as each person gives their account of the bandit's attack, each one somehow takes responsibility for nobleman's death. But who is right? Is anybody? And how do we know?

Some of the stories are only others' versions of witnesses' perspectives. And it really gets mind-boggling when you add another unavoidable layer to the perspectives - your own. How does the viewer know he has remembered the tale correctly? How do we know who's telling the truth? We don't, and that seems to be the gist of "Rashomon." The truth is we just don't know what the truth is.

"Rashomon" is a fascinating film with a mysterious intent as it surveys human emotional experience unfettered by plot or detail. If there is ever a question as to whether films are art, let "Rashomon" serve as Exhibit Number One.

My grades: "Paulie" C; "Yojimbo" A-; "Rashomon" A+

Lady Raiders fall to UTC Mocs

☐ Staff Reports

Lady Raiders 1 3 UT-Chatt.

The Chattanooga Lady Mocs took two games, 3-1 and 4-3, from the Lady Raider softball team Tuesday evening at Warner Park in Chattanooga.

In the first inning of game one, Chattanooga's Leah Tucker tripled in her first at bat but was left stranded. UTC rallied in the third inning when Keri Meigs and Kami Tucker managed back-to-back singles and were driven in by a Sarah Olson single to right center.

Then in the fourth inning, Megan Luring chipped one into left center, stretching it into a two-bagger, her

NEW PARKING LOT COMPLETED BY SMITH HALL PERMIT DESIGNATION CHANGED NEAR DAVIS SCIENCE

 The Parking Authority has announced the completion of the parking lot located on 1st Street adjacent to Smith Hall. This lot is designated as Green Permit parking.

 In addition, the newly designed parking spaces on B Street next to Woodmore Cafeteria have been completed and are also designated for Green Permit parking.

· Due to the addition of the new parking lot near Smith Hall and the redesigning of parking spaces on B Street, the parking lot located next to Davis Science Building (which is currently for both White and Green Permit parking) will be designated for White Permit parking only.

 This parking designation change for the Davis Science lot is now in effect.

 With the new lot and addition of spaces on B Street, along with the permit designation change in the Davis Science lot, the Parking Authority staff hope their efforts have benefited students as well as faculty, administration, and staff.

The Parking Authority staff is currently reviewing other locations on campus where future parking lots may be constructed. If you have any questions or concerns, please call the Parking Authority Office at 898-2850. Office hours are 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. The Parking Authority staff appreciates suggestions from students, faculty, and staff on ways to better serve the campus community.
