Toll-free calling begins July 22

Roz Johnson, 13, of Wartrace, won't have to dig around for enough quarters to call Nashville starting next week. But she won't be the only one. Everyone in Rutherford County will be able to call any part of the city toll-free when a new $40 million program, Metro Area Calling, begins July 22.

RUSTY GERBMAN News Editor

All calls to Nashville from surrounding counties will no longer be long distance starting July 22, which will be saving callers an estimated $104 million dollars in calls.

"All Nashville exchanges will be local," said Ermon Lature spokesmen for South Central Bell. "Nashville will be able to call all surrounding counties and all the surrounding counties will be able to call Nashville."

Rutherford County will be able to reach Nashville, Goodlettsville, and Old Hickory toll free.

The new system called Metro Area Calling will cost $40 million to install.

The Public Service Commission are the originations of the system and devised it in 1988 to encourage economice growth in Tennessee, that would be profitable for the company and the consumers by providing new cost control incentives.

Although Nashville will be able to contact Asams, Cedar Hill, Ashland City, Cross Plains, Orlinda, Eagleville, Gallatin, Greenbrier, Kingston Springs, Leba-Murfreesboro, Pleasant non., View. Portland, Smyrna, Springfield, Triune, Watertown and White House toll free and vice versa. The surrounding counties will not be able to call each other toll free.

Similar programs are already in effect in Memphis, Chattanooga and Knoxville areas.

Along with increased local calling distance, there will be an increase in rate payments. The current monthly rate payment for residents is $11.55 and $35.25 for businesses. Starting on the 22nd, the rates will increase to $12.15 for residents and $39.70 for buisnesses per month. The Nashville rates will drop instead of rise. They will drop 70 cents while all the others will raise.

Grill expansion date set for next summer

RUSTY GERBMAN News Editor

The expansion on the Grill in the KUC that was scheduled to have been completed by the fall of 1990 has been postponed until May of 1991.

"We were going to push it to tight and we were afraid that we would not be able to complete it by the fall," Charlie Pigg of campus planning said.

Pigg believed that they would have been able to have completed the physical renovations by this fall, however all the equipment needed to finsh the project would not have been obtained in a sufficient time frame.

"It was four to six months delivery on the equipment,"Pigg said.

"We will have to go in next summer and do the renovations," Pigg said. "It (the Grill) will be back in service in fall of 1991."

They will start some of the expansion in late fall or at the first of the year in an area that will not hamper the grills businesss. During the summer the grill will be cloesd and the said renovations will begin.

"There is 600 to 700 thousand dollars worth of equipment," Pigg said.

The total budget for the Grill expansion is one and half million dollars. The money will be coming from the repair and replacment fund and the unallocated debt services pool.

The expansion will include enlarging the preparation and serving area.

We will be enlarging the seating area by enclosing the terrace area," Pigg said.

"Getting ready. That's the critical thing is getting ready in the spring and finishing the fall," Pigg said.

They have no real plan ready if the problem comes up that they do not get finished during the summer.

We just have to do it during the summer," Pigg said. "We have no other alternative."

Dallas Biggers, KUC building manager, said he thought that one of the other cafeterias would have to be open full time if The Grill was not finished on time. But, Pigg believes that that would be

Feds investigate phone game

The Justice Department, responding to a request from U.S. Rep. Bart Gordon, has asked the FBI and federal and state prosecutors to launch investigations of a telephone trivia contest.

Gordon had asked U.S. Attorney General Richard Thornburg to look into whether "The Game", a nationwide 1-900 phone contest, violated state and federal gambling laws. The Tennessee congressman said that the Justice Department has taken "two of the

"It is just not practical to try to run a Grill type operation anywhere else on campus," Pigg said. "That's why we are timing this thing to hit the Grill area in May, during the summer months, and be ready to roll in fall."

Along with all the other expansions, the food selection will increase as well. The Grill would be broken up into several food stations, and students would walk around a circular path to choose what they want. Possible food stations would be a Grille Works — serving such items as burgers, fries, fried chicken and fish; Sweet Things — serving desserts, cookies, cake and ice cream; Sandwich Board — serving submarines and sandwiches with choice of bread and toppings; Beverage Station — serving coffee, soft drinks, and juices; Salad Garden — a multi-function salad bar; Kettle Classics — pre-packaged fast food for people who are in a hurry.

"The new arrangement would really help (the Grill customers) get their food faster," Pigg said. "It's a much more efficient arrangment."

least in part, whether The Game falls within the ambit of lottery statutes. In the past, courts have found chance predominant when contest questions are so easy that everyone can be expected to respond correctly."

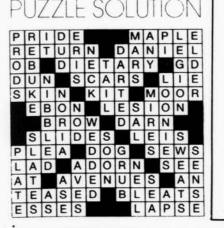

The letter says the FBI, a U.S. Attorney in California and the Tennessee Attorney General had been asked to investigate further.

Gordon said he understands that the contestants who made The Game's first grand-prize round in May were asked, "How many eggs are there in three dozen?"

"That question was for the grand prize of $1 million, and it should be the hardest, but I think just about everyone could answer that question correctly," Gordon said. "I look forward to hearing what the prosecutors and the FBI have to say about the skill involved in 'The Game' when they consider the grand prize question and also that the correct answer is not required to win, only the closest to correct."

Gordon said he is looking at ways Congress can respond to the current explosion of 1-900 numbers, which include sexually explicit talk lines and "pay to play" contests.

The congressman noted that there are many responsible entrepeneurs operating 1-900 businesses, but he added that many in the industry say scores of 1-900 businesses are consumer rip-offs .

Sidelines interim editor picked

John-Darryl Athans, a senior journalism major, was named Tuesday by the Student Publications Committee as interim editor of Sidelines for the remainder of the summer semester.

Athans takes the helm of the paper after summer editor Wm. Andrew Turman resigned last week following differences of opinion with Student Publications Coordinator Jenny Tenpenny Crouch.

"I am sorry to see a talented person such as Andrew resign, but we had major differences of opinion that could not be resolved," Crouch said.

Athans, who was selected this spring by the board to serve as fall editor, was a "natural" choice to fill the vacancy, Crouch said.

"This will give Darryl the opportunity to get his staff organized for the fall semester and at the same time insure that the newspaper will be published for the remaining weeks of the summer," Crouch said.

Time ripe for close look look at area's drug laws

The departure of Ronald Reagan from the White House has taken some of the steam out of our "war on drugs." While many people say illegal drug use is still a major problem for our country, events in the rest of the world have overshadowed that "crisis." With anti-drug hysteria dying down, it is time to take another look at our attitude towards marijuana.

Use of marijuana has declined over the last few years, but it is still by far the most popular illegal drug. Indeed, some estimates show that it is Tennessee's number one cash crop. And while possesion for personal use is legal in Alaska, in most of the U.S. growing, smoking or selling marijuana can land you in jail.

Making this drug legal is a drastic step. America may not be ready for the Old Panama Red brand next to Marlboro's at Kroger's, but there are other alternatives.

One is the decriminalization of marijuana. During the 1970s, many states reduced the possession of a small amount of marijuana to the status of a misdemeanor. If arrested, one is given a citation and must pay a fine if found guilty. While marijuana is still illegal, the consequences of its use are roughly equivalent to speeding in a car.

The decriminalization push has slowed during the last decade. Nebraska was the last state to do so and that was in 1978. However, Tennessee should begin to look at being the next state to decriminalize.

This may not be a pratical program. But since it would only alter existing laws rather than totally chaging them, it could be done on an experimental basis for a few years. If it does work, great, if not, change the laws back. What do we have to lose?

Car search proves real adventure

JENNY CROUCH

Publications Coordinator

With the mistaken impression that we knew what we were doing, my husband and I recently undertook the chore of buying a new car.

I must emphasize that "we thought" we knew what we were doing and had every intention of buying the car we wanted at a "reasonable" price. We discovered almost right off the bat we knew nothing of how to "haggle" over the price of a vehicle or get more for our old beat-up buggy than what it was actually worthy.

Not to belittle any of our esteemed local car dealerships, what goes on is common practice among all car dealerships. You never know what you are really paying for the new car of your choice or what you are really getting as trade-in value on your old car. These things are cleverly disguised in confusing paperwork.

The real bottom line is about $10,000 more than what you thought it was. The trade-in value is lost with the buy-out and the only bottom line that matters in the end is what you want to pay.

Now, when you are looking at a $25,000 vehicle, the business manager doesn't want to here a squeaky, little voice say, "As little as I can get away with."

"Let's get serious, how much do you really hope to pay each month," he says.

"How about $200 a month," we respond. We already have a house; we don't want to feel like we have yet another ball and chain around our collective necks. We just want a nice, comfortable vehicle.

The trick, I have learned in this experience, is never tell them what you can actually afford to pay right off the bat. If you do, you're stuck with that — and your payment won't get any lower when they do their final analysis.

If you pretend you are poor, which in my case isn't hard to do, they at least work "deal" in several different ways in an effort for you to have the car of your dreams.

So the calculations continue and momentarily another option is available. You then try to guage whether this is the last option or whether you think he still has a few tricks left in the old calculator.

Finally, the computer and calculator churn and the business manager comes back with what we perceive to be the last option of the night.

And we are correct. This is take it or leave it time.

We can sleep on it, but he comes back with the real hook: "You can drive it home tonight if you want to. But I'll have to finish the paperwork tomorrow."

He knows if I drive that car off the lot I will never bring it back — whether I want to pay the price or not.

We leave. We want the car but not that badly. We'll wait until we see what we are going to have to live with for the next four years.

Yes, we go back the next day — after analyzing our finances and decide we can live with the final option.

The disgusting part of the whole situation is that we are playing the game that everyone else is. The bottom line is that we are paying ungodly prices for heaps of metal that will have very little value when we are through with them. We are indebted to GMAC, Ford Motor and all the others for our vanity — and little else.

This time we could afford to indulge our vanities. In four years maybe we will take a more utilitarian approach — but I doubt it. We will pay more for what is perceived to be more. But what we are really doing in the long run is paying for less.

'Ghost' summer's first big sleeper hit

JOHN-DARRYL ATHANS Interim Editor

When was the last time you went to the movies, expecting to be totally disappointed and completley ready to bitch at your date for dragging your sorry butt to see such a silly film, only to fall in love with it?

Surprise! This is exactly what happended to me the day I saw the new film "Ghost," which coincidentally, opened Friday 13.

The movie, which stars Patrick Swayze as Sam Wheat, an investment banker who has recently moved in with his part-time pottery-making girlfriend Molly, played by Demi Moore, and Whoopie Goldberg as a charlatan spiritual advisor turned legitimate psychic, named Oda Mae Brown, combine to create a well balanced film, mixing drama, romance and humor.

Though Sam and Molly are incredibly in love, Sam can never seem to muster up enough courage to tell her he loves her. This is a tragic flaw in any relationship, but when Sam is murdered during an apparent mugging he forever loses his chance to tell Molly just how much he really loves her. Or does he?

Shortly after his death, Sam realizes that he has become a ghost and that his death oddly coincides with a money-laundering scam that he uncovered earlier in the day. Wow, what a conincidence! Wrong. Sam discovers that he had been murdered and that Molly is still in danger.

"Casper to the rescue!" Whoops, wrong story. But it's close.

Wheat is desperately trying to warn Molly of the imminent danger that is about to befall her, but his attempts to make contact are all for nought. Sam, in despair, wanders the streets still searching for a way to warn his endangered loved one. Finally, as a last resort he visits Oda Mae Brown, a spiritual advisor and psychic.

Brown, who until now has been ripping-off the loved ones and relatives of the deceased for a living, is dumbfounded when she actually hears a voice from the great beyond. Guess who? Why it's Sam, of course!

Sam finally persuades Oda Mae to contact Molly. However, she doesn't believe any of this until Sam, using Oda Mae as a medium, convinces her by bringing up facts that only he could possibly know. Together, Sam and Oda Mae are out to rescue Molly and avenge his death.

Though the movie may seem to be a typical ghost film, it does throw in some interesting twists. These answer questions like: why is a ghost in limbo, rather than in Heaven or Hell; how do ghosts learn to move objects; what might the messengers of death look like and are they different for Heaven or Hell?

Though Swayze's roles as an action hero in movies like "Steel Dawn" and "Red Dawn" have proved to be failures, he has done a fine job as the lead in romantic

New jazz show offers more than just talk

From Staff Reports

They may not be household names, but some of the greatest musical talent around can be found every Monday night on WMOT's new music/talk show "Improvised Thoughts."

Internationally known vibist Jerry Tachoir hosts the show, which features music and talk from a variety of artists. Past visitors have included Matt Rollings, pianist for Lyle Lovett's Large Band; jazz guitarist Stanley Jordan and multi-instrumentalist; Nashville session great Mark O'Connor and the amazing Bela Fleck, banjoist and leader of Bella Fleck and the Flecktones. Bassist Roy Vogt, currently playing with country star Jerry Reed, will be the show's next guest Monday, July 23.

While many radio interviews offer some music from the guest, "Improvised Thoughts," adds a new twist. Each week's guest provides a selection of material, including his/her own work and favorite songs from other artists. This features gives listeners a better picture of the styles and artists who have influenced today's crop of musicians.

Many of the guests are from the Nashville area, showcasing the jazz talent working here. According to the station, the goal is "focus on jazz from the musicians perspective."

Completing the local touch, the show is entirely produced by WMOT, MTSU's public jazz/ news radio station.

"Improvised Thoughts," is broadcast every Monday from 7 to 8 p.m. on WMOT, which broadcasts at 98.5 FM. films. In this picture, he captures the heart of anyone in the audience with a hint of romanticism in their soul. This is his finest work to date.

The same holds true for both Moore and Goldberg. Moore is very convincing in her portrayal of the lonely and vulnerable woman left behind by the death of her lover. Together, Moore and Swayze move the audience with the magic of "a romantic wand."

Goldberg, who has struggled as of late due to several poorly written comedies and action pictures, finally proves that she can still entertain without every other word being an obscenity (though she does come close).

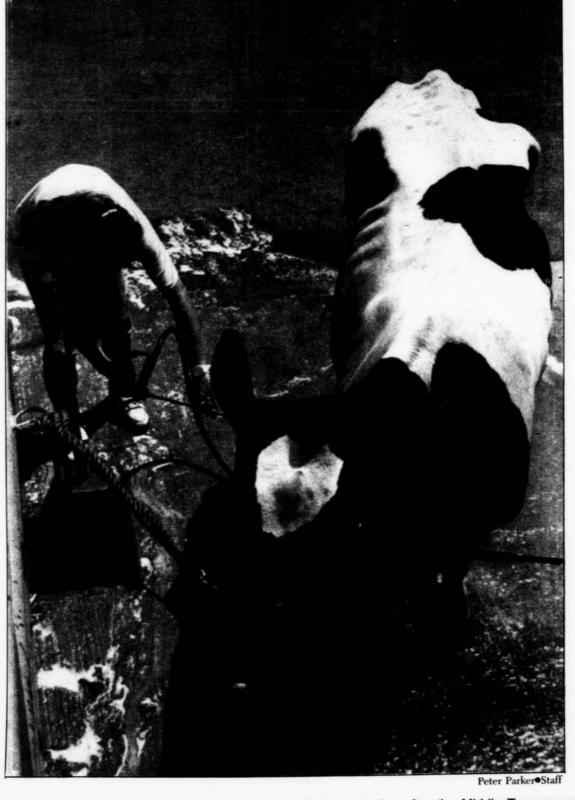

Ghost has touching scenes that are sure to melt the heart of even the coldest of souls. Director Jerry Zucker, who worked with a team including his brother to create such comedies as "The Naked Gun" and "Airplane!," displays a knack for taking the audience on a rollercoaster ride from emotion to emotion. He did a wonderful job of mixing comedy, tragedy, suspense and romance into what I believe to be the "sleeper" of the summer. This is one film not to be missed!

Mall life: a contradiction in terms?

DAKOTA MONTANA

Actor/Singer/Staff Writer Soon, millions of parents will be sending their little darlings off to college for the first time.

While most will be looking forward to the knowledge their children will be receiving in the hallowed halls of academia, most will also feel a little fear for what the social side of higher ecducation will bring. In other words, they're worried that their kids are going to get tanked. A lot.

And let's face it, that's true. When you have a chance to drink for the first time without having to face your parents, many people will. Indeed, scientists say the average college freshman pukes more than any other animal on earth.

But stricter drinking laws and those damn photos on drivers licences now prevent a lot of firsttime students from receiving their fair share of Mr. Liquid Carbohydrate. So what to do for fun? Today, for a lot of freshmen, college recreation means going to the mall.

The mall. Kind of makes you tremble doesn't it? Roll it around on your tongue for a while. To most adults, "the mall" means a enclosed gathering of stores that you should get in and out of as soon as possible. But to teenagers, the mall is more than just a place; it's a way of life.

So fear it if you must. But fear should not stand in the way of knowledge. In order to find out more about mall life, I recently went on Mall Tour 1990©. In addition to our own local commercial establishments, I visisted malls in Georgia, Alabama and Louisana.

Like any good anthropologist, I then observed the basic aspects of mall life. Dress, eating habits, security, and mating habits. While these findings may terrify you, approach them in the spirt of scholarly reasearch in which they weren't intended.

ATTIRE — The code of the schoolyard requires appropriate clothes and you don't want to violate the code of the schoolyard. Jeans and a t-shirt just won't do.

We'll start with hair. High fashion is fine, but if you don't have the time or money, just wear your hair long, bleached, permed and combed so that the dark roots can be viewed.

For color, think bright, think florescent, think day-glo. Hell, think atomic pink for that matter. For guys, any heavy metal band is a good role model. For women, try that Lita Ford look. In general try to find expensive clothes that look cheap.

Food — Most malls now have a variety of restaurants arranged around an open plaza. This is better known to mall rats as the food court. Everything from pizza to hamburgers to pizza to hamburgers to pizza to hamburgers is available at the average food court. This is because to the average teenage hormone horror ethnic food means Taco Bell.

While finding something edible is hard, finding condiments is harder. The routine for getting some salt or a few extra packets of ketchup now may be the closest you'll get to the glory days of East Germany. Just remember to bring a copy of your birth certificate to show the cashier.

SECURITY — In days past, cities that could not defend themselves hired mercinaries to fight their battles. For a price, these soldiers of fortune would risk their lives. Though there was always a chance they could turn against the people who paid their wages.

Similarly, malls also hire outsiders to keep the peace. They're commonly called "rent-a-cops," implying that they couldn't make in onto the police force. However, that's not entirely fair, since many of these bozos couldn't even make it through the training program at the "Tank'n Tummy."

Like the mercinaries of old, these guys often turn against the people they're suppose to be protecting. Usually, however, they are harmless and will not attack unless approached while eating.

MATING HABITS — Where do little mall rats come from? Big malls rats of course. Like any other species, the dwellers of the mall propagate themselves.

While originally believed to be descended from those old guys who hang around in front of the courthouse on public squares, there are theories that mall rats were developed by a secret CIA program in the early '60s. In any case, there is still no evidence that such creatures can breed with normal humans. Efforts to date have only resulted in game show hosts and skate punks.

CONCLUSIONS — Like your dad says whenever you make a major mistake: what have we learned here today? To be honest, not much, but let's sum up. 1) Stay away from malls. 2) I need a life.

Mall Tour 1990

Intrepid reporter Dakota Montana covered the southeast to gather information on the secret life of mall rats. Over the past month, Montana has (not always by choice) visited malls in New Orleans. Baton Rouge, Birmingham and Atlanta.

SPORTS Dean Hayes is off to coach in the '90 Goodwill Games

TONY J. ARNOLD Sports Editor

This Friday the world will be turning it's attention to the Goodwill Games - a step below the Olympics.

The 17-day event will feature 2,500 athletes representing more than 50 countries. Among the elite is MTSU head track coach Dean Hayes.

The Raider men's and women's track mentor will be the head coach for the United States track team.

"It's a great honor to be named the head coach at the Goodwill Games," Hayes said from his home Sunday night. He departed for the contest in Seattle, Wash. early Monday morning.

"The athletes will start arriving (today) but it's just another meet in training camp for most of them," Hayes said. "We will have a good competitive team and be well represented." Hayes is used to big assignments such as this one. In fact he served as an assistant coach in the track and field events at the 1988 Olympics held in Seoul, Korea.

"Someday, perhaps the Goodwill Games will be as big as the Olympics," said Hayes. "But the highlight of my career is the Olympics because it's the big one."

The internationally known coach thinks that his coaching position could lead to bigger and better things for himself as well as his program at MTSU.

"Being head coach at the games could lead to other international assignments," said Hayes. As for recruiting efforts, the coach added that "It's nice and impressive to an athlete to know that someone in my position is after them. It can't hurt anyway."

The accomplishments of Hayes are not going unnoticed by the University's officials. Due to his succesful career Hayes has been rewarded with the revitalization of the Raiders' mens track program.

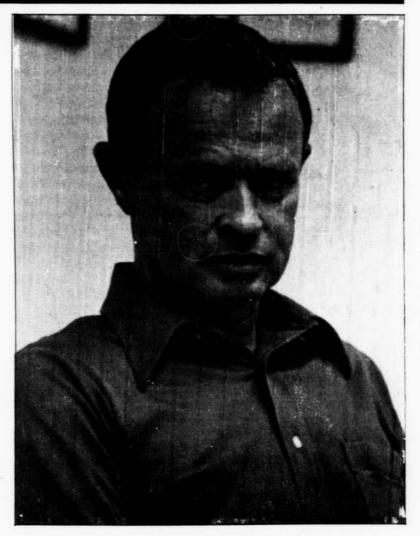

The program was dropped in 1987. Since then Hayes has guided the Lady Raider's to several successful seasons. He also has received a new outdoor track, which circles around the football field, for his programs.

Hayes reported that he has signed several quality athletes and has received verbal commitment's from others for both programs.

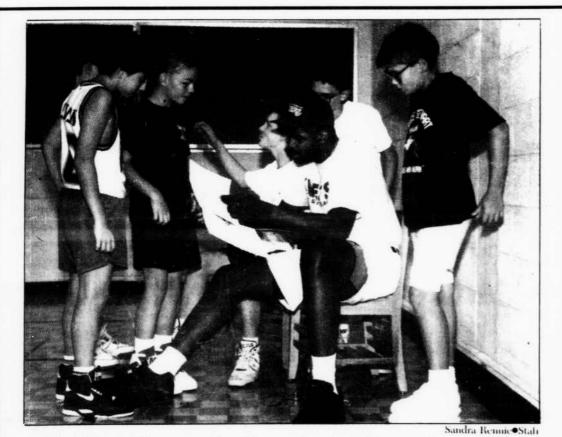

"It's been a very big summer," Hayes remarked. "With a good recruiting year, the Goodwill Games and a new track, everything is on a plus note."

"This summer has been busy and exciting. In the 1990's we hope to have a quality decade here at MTSU."

And with the past sucess of coach Hayes on a local and national basis, somehow I think we will.

MTSU's all-time leading scorer, Kerry Hammonds, is back after completing a professional basketball season in France. He is a guest at Bruce Stewarts camp this week.

Pete Rose to go in the slammer? TONY J. ARNOLD He could receive a maximum sentence of six Sports Editor On Sept. 11, 1985, Pete Rose stood at first base with tears in his eyes. He had just hit his 4,192nd base hit becoming the all-time leader.

Since that point, however, Rose has been kicked out of baseball for excessive gambling and now stands to go to jail for federal tax charges.

The man people nicknamed "Charlie Hustle" for his gritty determination on the baseball diamond will be sentenced by U.S. District Judge S. Arthur Spiegel tommorrow. He could receive a maximum sentence of si years in prison and a hefty $500,000 fine.

Rose pleaded guilty on April 20 to two felony charges of filing false income tax returns. According to his plea, he failed to pay $162,703 on unreported income of $354,976 from 1985-87.

Most of the unreported money came from cash Rose received from signing baseball memoriabilia across the nation.

If Rose goes to prison, many feel his induction into the hall of fame will be in severe jeopardy.

Lake is out and Loos is in at Peay

Associated Press

Dave Loos, an assistant coach at Memphis State for the past four seasons, was named on Saturday as Austin Peay State University's new head baketball coach.

Loos, who formerly served as head coach at Christian Brothers College in Memphis from 1982-86, replaces Lake Kelly, who resigned Memorial day to accept a sales and promotions position at WKYT-TV in Lexington Ky.

He joined coach Larry Finch at Memphis State in 1986 and helped direct his alma mater to an 85-43 record, including two NCAA tournament appearances and a Metro Conference tournament title.

Loos played an important role in recruitng, scouting opponents and working closely with Finch in developing game strategy at Memphis State. In addition, he helped raise the Tigers' cumulative grade-point average from 1.7 to 2.9.

"I am very fortunate that coach Finch allowed me to participate in the day-to-day operations of the Memphis State basketball program, not only on-court but off the court as well." Loos said. "I always wanted to coach at the division-I level and each step along the way has prepared me for this." Prior to joining Memphis State, Loos had four succesful seasons as the head coach at Christian Brothers College in Memphis.

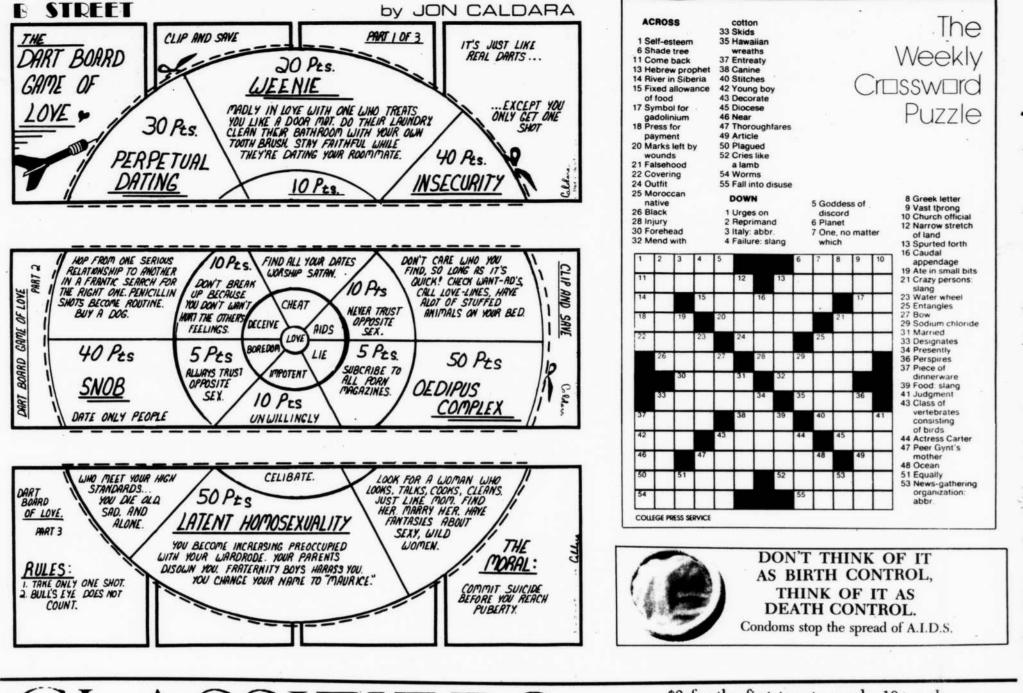

After posting a 16-14 record in the 1982-83 season, Loos recorded three straight 20-victory campaigns and led CBC to its first Volunteer State Athletic Conference Championship.

"I'm very excited about this opportunity," Loos said. "This is a position I really wanted, not only because it was a head coaching position but also because I like the direction the people here at Austin Peay want this program to go-- a blend of winning basketball, student-athletes who are serious about their education and student-athletes who are solid citizens.

"If you are going to have a solid program, and not just a good team, those things are neccesary," Loos said.

"In this whole (application and interview) process, I felt like I fit the situation," Loos said. "Austin Peay has owned a strong reputation as a basketball school. But the school also has a very good reputation educationally and Clarksville is a very attractive community. As a result, there should be no problem selling the product we have here."
