Nursing care studied

RUSTY GERBMAN
Assistant News Editor

A psychology professor has received a grant from the Department of Human Services for $231,000 to study nursing home staff performances.

John Schnelle has received this grant for the last seven years. His study examines how nursing home staffs take care of their patients and methods to improve their care.

His research involves studies on how well incontinence patients, or patients with loss of bladder control, are looked after.

Schnelle also concentrates on patients that are restrained and patients that are paralyzed and need to be moved regularly by caretakers.

He has designed a management system that has improved the regularity in which the patients are checked. This ultimately decreases patient neglect, according to Schnelle.

"The key ingredient [in care] is consistency," Schnelle said. "We have improved the care in all those areas."

According to Schnelle, the National Institution of Health sends out announcements on subjects that they would like to see studied and researched. Then interested parties write and submit proposals to be reviewed by "peer groups."

These peer groups then approve or disapprove their proposals.

"It is super competitive," Schnelle said.

There were 32 other universities that had submitted proposals for a grant and only three were funded; MTSU, Pennsylvania State and the University of New York in Buffalo.

The amount of the grant varies from year to year, Schnelle said, but it is generally around $230,000 a year.

"This is the money that funds the graduate student's scholarships," Schnelle said.

Schnelle has six or seven graduate students working with him throughout the year. The students do the majority of the work in the nursing homes. They also assist in the writing of the manuscript.

"This gives grad students a paying job and work experience," said Schnelle. "They work long and hard hours."

They are not able to go on vacation like regular students, he said. The patients need constant attention.

"These grad students work far beyond what regular university positions require," Schnelle said.

Schnelle believes his research is very important for a number of reasons.

"The population is aging dramatically," he said, "causing tremendous health pressures."

"The majority of the care is going to be provided by low-paid nursing staff. We are going to have to know how to manage them better." There are many areas that can be improved, Schnelle said.

John Schnelle recently received a grant to study the care given to patients in nursing homes by staff members. Schnelle competed against approximately 32 other universities for the grant renewal.

"The research is important for the same reasons that nursing homes are important," Schnelle said.

Schnelle is also a co-investigator with Dr.

Joe Ouslander, a professor at UCLA. Schnelle visited UCLA in March with a member of his staff to help Ouslander set up his research.

In June, Schnelle is sending a few staff members to help Ouslander develop procedures for a better operated nursing home. ■

Students are environmentally concerned: survey

STAFF REPORTS

Today's college students, often labeled materialistic and self-centered, are actually environmentally conscious, with 95 percent agreeing that Congress should pass tougher environmental protection laws, according to a survey commissioned by the National Wildlife Federation.

The survey conducted in November 1989 by Hughes Research Corp., a national research firm based in Rockville, Md. Five hundred undergraduate students enrolled in four-year colleges or universities who were between 17 and 24 years of age were surveyed by phone. Respondants were divided equally between males and females.

Other survey questions revealed that nearly 75 percent of the students believed that recycling of newspapers, glasses and cans should be required by law in all communities.

Of those surveyed, 66 percent believed that industry today is more concerned about environmental protection than it was five years ago, but 76 percent believed that industry influences government to pass less effective environmental protection laws.

The respondents also believed that the federal government should spend more on protecting the environment and less on military defense.

The majority of the students claimed they were willing to take their environmental beliefs to the voting booth by choosing the candidate with the strongest stance on environmental protection.

Despite looking towards Congress and elected officials to provide legislation to protect the environment, 80 percent of the students believed that "all of us" have a primary responsibility for environmental protection.

Ways to assume responsibility for the environment that were endorsed by those polled were paying more for products and packaging that is environmentally safe (94 percent), and reducing the use of styrofoam, aerosol and other harmful products.

Overall, 94 percent agreed that college students can make a difference when protecting the environment.

"We are tremendously encouraged by these results," said NWF president Jay D. Hair. "College students are expressing a deep concern for the environment and the overwhelming majority are willing to do something about it."

"Given their intense concern for the environment, and their willingness to get personally involved in this issue, this survey paints the picture of American college students as a formidable resource ready to go to work to help solve our environmental problems," said Tom Hughes of Hughes Research Corp.

Based on the new survey size, the results can be considered accurate to within plus or minus five percentage points. ■

Trees to be adopted on campus

TERRY MASSEY
Assistant News Editor

The MTSU Students for Environmental Action is sponsoring an Adopt-A-Tree program in celebration of Earth Day '90.

Today is the last day for placing orders in front of the KUC bookstore.

One can choose between several hardwoods for $15, or have the tree accompanied by a plaque which will bear the name of the donor.

The trees will be delivered between 2 and 4 p.m. on April 16 for planting on campus. Tools and a location will be provided to purchasers.

"We hope students will want to plant a tree so they can come back someday and see how their tree has grown," said S.E.A. president Karen Weller.

Weller points out that this is not the only benefit of the program.

"Trees play an important role in the environment," said Weller. "They reduce soil erosion, moderate weather problems, and produce the oxygen that we breathe."

The Adopt-A-Tree program is one of several events planned by S.E.A. for the April 22 Earth Day '90 celebration. It is in response to the national tree planting goal.

"Senator Gore set a goal of 400,000 trees around the country and we want to do our part and get the students involved," said S.E.A. secretary-treasurer Beth Tidwell.

Students express concern for Earth

In a recent study sponsored by the National Wildlife Federation, college students were surveyed about their attitudes toward the environment. Overwhelmingly, students expressed concern for the future of life on our planet.

What makes this particular study so important is that the researchers went directly to those who will inherit the seemingly insurmountable problems of pollution, global warming, acid rain, and so on.

Overwhelmingly, they said that they were ready to meet the challenge.

After generation of generation of environmental abuse by our forefathers, a new generation is ready to make the necessary changes to save our planet.

Those changes can begin immediately by voting for those politicians who make environmental issues their main concern.

And changes can begin immediately if we start now setting the example for future generations.

The 90's will be a decade of 'downward mobility'

David Robinson

PFS Campus Pastor

*From the heights we leap and go
To the valleys down below
Always answering to the call
To the lowest place of all.
(from Hinds' Feet On High Places, by Hannah Hurnard)*

Were I to make a prophecy about the decade of the '90s it would be about a quiet revolution of "downward mobility." As Tracy Chapman says, it sounds like a whisper; but as this decade progresses, the sound will grow and grow.

Downward mobility: what are we talking about here? At the heart of this revolution is the desire to give oneself away for the sake of what one believes, and for the sake of making one's world a better place for others. It has many other names and faces: the Peace Corps, volunteerism (Tennessee's great heritage once again on the rise?), service and missionary movements.

I see the numbers of people heading into those big-bucks careers on the wane, and the numbers of people moving into teaching, service and care careers on the rise. I envision more and more people choosing careers which will never reach a six-digit salary, yet have other great rewards which far surpass merely getting a fat paycheck.

I see a whole new generation of college students who have become disillusioned with the "Myrtle the Turtle" corporate ladder mentality. I have met many students who have a great interest in making a difference in their world, people who desire to reach out to the needy, hurting, oppressed, hungry, and disadvantaged to offer some form of hope and help.

I think the vast majority of college students are sick of affluence and our culture's self-indulgent worship of the materialistic god. I think students of the '90s want their life to count for something more than just getting and grabbing. I have seen an increase of awareness and concern for the tough issues facing planet Earth. I think college students today are sick of hearing empty rhetoric, whether from politicians, professors or pastors. They want to see it lived out in day-by-day experiences.

I believe the pendulum is swinging back: from the ME/GREED generation of the '80s towards a new YOU/GIVING generation of the '90s. I believe we are moving away from shallow idealism and apathy towards compassionate realism.

You can see it in the rise of Habitat for Humanity campus chapters across the states, of which there are now over 60, including a newly forming chapter here at MTSU. You can see it in the 49 percent of the student body at MTSU who are classified as non-traditional. Many of these people are returning to college after becoming disillusioned by the corporate scramble. Rather than die of high blood pressure and a heart attack at the age of 45 from a high-paying, stress-filled, unsatisfying job, they are returning to pursue their hearts' desires.

I have a friend here at MTSU who is in his late twenties and has just returned to college this past fall from a high-paying career in retail management. He got fed up with the fast lane, and is now following his dream of becoming a teacher, perhaps in a third world country. He has entered into a time of voluntary poverty in order to pursue his dream.

I applaud such choices. They are movements downward, choices of downward mobility. They are sacrifices.

Some might call such people fools or fanatics, filled with delusions of grandeur, thinking they can change the world. Yuppies would call such people "Dummies." Others might simply shake their heads and wonder why they squandered their opportunities of becoming rich and secure.

But I call them heroes. Those downwardly mobile among us are the David Livingstones and Mother Teresas of our day. They turn our heads and cause us to see a different constellation of stars, those beautiful shining eyes of the needy people of our world. They are following in the footsteps of Another who also emptied himself, the One who said, "Whoever wants to become great among you must be your servant; just as the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve and to give his life as a ransom for many."

Gorby's for gun control

To the Editor:

Gun control proponents can satisfy their innermost longings by taking a one-way trip to Russia. Time magazine's "Man of the Decade" needs help in disarming the Lithuanians who are seeking independence from the butchers of the Kremlin.

The job should be easy since Moscow has made it virtually impossible for its citizens to own guns. It did not take long for Mikhail Gorbachev to show his true colors, did it?

Sincerely,

Some questions on abortion

To the Editor:

Does the "right to life", require all to be parents? Forbid birth control? Does the "right to religion" require all to have a religion? Which one? If one can be legislated, why not both? Do "rights" dictate morals? Whose? Blood transfusions are "sin" for some religions; should they be banned? What if they're 100% right? Would they be outlawed? Should they? Should the government control religion and family planning?

International Cultural Day offers multi-national feast

CHARLES DUDAS
Staff Writer

If you'd like to broaden your scope of international culture, as well as enjoy foods of the world, the International Cultural Day is for you.

Sponsored by MTSU's International Student Services, the event is scheduled for April 21 at 6 p.m. in the JUB Tennessee Room and will feature a buffet-style feast of international foods, as well as music, dancing and songs of the world. MTSU Interim President Wallace Prescott will be the speaker.

Ayaz Ahmed, chairman of the event, explains, "The banquet represents different countries at MTSU and demonstrates a brief picture of cultural heritage. This is an opportunity for students and faculty to learn about different countries. International students can also learn about American culture and contribute to MTSU cultural experience."

Ahmed has experience in conducting such events from presenting similar programs when he was a student at the University of Arkansas.

Tech Webneh, director of International Student Services, notes that the event "will enhance the cultural exchange at MTSU" and will become an annual event.

The countries represented at the cultural program are: India, West Germany, France, England, Japan, Malaysia, Saudi Arabia, China, Iran, Norway and Singapore.

The International Student Services program represents 60 countries at MTSU and helps foreign students with admissions, immigration papers and any problems encountered as a student.

Webneh is pleased when he says, "MTSU recognizes the international community. The foreign student knows they are represented at MTSU and a part of the university."

International Student Services also hopes to organize an International Student Association whose goal will be to represent foreign students by encouraging active participation on campus and giving international students a stronger voice in student government.

Tickets for the cultural day are on sale now. The price for MTSU students is $7.50 and $8.50 for others. For further information, call 898-2238. ■

Still lifes on display

From Staff Reports

The MTSU Photographic Gallery will present a free exhibition of color and black and white still life photos from New England-based photographer Olivia Parker through May 3.

Critic and author Mark Strand, writing in the introduction to Parker's Under the Looking Glass, published by the New York Graphic Society, notes that her work contains "a remarkably suggestive world of particulars — so suggestive, in fact, that we are not sure if we are looking at strange extensions of reality or colorful projections of dream."

David Featherstone writes in Modern Photography magazine that Parker's work deals with "symbolic meaning drawn from the unconscious mind...the photographs exist on the border of the real and imagined."

The MTSU Photographic Gallery is located in the Learning Resources Center. Hours are 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday; 8 a.m. to noon on Saturday; and 6 to 10 p.m. on Sunday. ■

Moore's 'Roger & Me' shows tragedy, humor

JONATHAN MALCOLM LAMPLEY

Special to Sidelines

Roger & Me is a documentary about the closing of the General Motors auto plants in Flint, Mich. and the attempts of filmmaker Michael Moore to convince GM chairman Roger Smith to visit Flint and see what his decisions have wrought.

The scenes of Flint, a dying, boarded-up ghost town, convey a sense of apocalyptic tragedy not to be found in any film in a long time. The desperation of the unemployed factory workers trying to make a living is heartbreaking; and the complete nonchalance of Smith and other GM executives will enrage even the saintliest of viewers.

And yet, somehow, some way, Roger & Me is one of the funniest films of the year. Michael Moore, who wrote, produced, directed, and stars in the film, has a wry, sarcastic sense of humor, and that is what makes Roger & Me so fascinating. He has an ability to make you laugh even as you cry at the chilling evidence of the American Dream gone sour.

By interviewing Flint celebrities like Bob Eubanks and Anita Bryant, Moore satirizes hollow attempts to cheer people up in the midst of bleak realities. When Miss Michigan — who is in town for a parade — is questioned regarding her views on the Flint crisis, she is revealed to be the stereotyped vapid beauty queen; her main concern is that the folks in Flint pray for her to win the Miss America title (she did).

The most affecting moments remain those where Moore works with common, everyday people. The people of Flint are survivors; even when the town fathers sink millions of dollars into ineffectual tourist traps, such as an ill-fated auto-themed amusement park, the citizens who remain keep on plugging away.

The people are a source of inspiration and of grotesque humor — folks like Rhoda Britton, a widow who raises rabbits "for pets or meat." Rhoda espouses her survivalist philosophy even while she absently clubs a bunny to death, then cleans it for dinner. Some have said the sequence is symbolic of GM's treatment of its loyal former employees.

Perhaps the most memorable person interviewed is Fred Ross, Flint's deputy sheriff, who spends most of his time evicting people who can no longer afford to pay their rent. Hardened by the threats and pleas of displaced persons, Ross comes across as a decent man forced to do a dirty job. The most effective scene in Roger & Me is a sequence showing Roger Smith giving a speech at a lush GM executive Christmas party, intercut with footage of Ross evicting a family on Christmas Eve. Smith quotes Charles Dickens as Ross orders the family Christmas tree tossed out of the house. It's a darkly funny moment indeed.

Recently, Michael Moore has come under criticism for taking too many liberties. For example, Moore often changes the order of the film's events — the most notorious example of which is a visit to Flint by President Reagan, which actually occurred several years after the time Moore places it in.

Nevertheless, Roger & Me has something important to say, and the issues it brings up cannot be ignored. The smoke screen GM has attempted to throw up by discrediting Moore cannot hide the fact that Flint is dead. The fact that Big Business is incorrigibly greedy doesn't give GM the right to destroy the town that helped make it great, and this is Moore's point. It is a valid one, no matter what GM says.

Although technically very amateurish, shot on 16 millimeter film and with the sound often blotted by ambient noise, Roger & Me is a film you cannot ignore. Right or wrong, fair or foul, Michael Moore has put together a scathing assault on the modern interpretation of the American Dream that no conscious viewer will forget. ■

PERSONALS

JODY MOORE

In Daytona we partied together at the New Frontier Vodka lemonade and LOTS of beer.

There's a wild party-do I dare think? Holly and Amy had too much to drink.

That New Frontier party with Dan's car stereo the music that night was as loud as it could go!

Last but not least remember the "Beer-a-mid" and of course all of the naked dancing that Jeff did.

So keep me in mind now that you're back at M.T. you've got someone thinking of you in OHIO at B.G.

Dianne
