Cartoon designed to enhance logo

by Valorie Vaughn

In an effort "to develop a consistent university image," a cartoon characterization of the Blue Raider mascot has been developed to be used with the MTSU logo, according to Dot Harrison, public relations director.

Harrison said that a number of people worked on the cartoon. "It was designed to be a likeness of the MTSU raider that is seen at football and basketball games," she said.

The public relations office contacted the art department last spring, and an art student, Jeff Jones, did the initial drawings for the cartoon. After Jones left MTSU for the summer, Oliver Fancher, of the art department, continued work on the cartoon. Marilyn Wheeley, an employee of the office of Alumni Relations, finished the sketches, Harrison said.

Although the cartoon will be done in various poses, his face and costume will not be changed, and he will never be used away from a Blue Raider inscription or at least the MTSU logo, Harrison said.

"Part of the job of the public relations department, is to develop a consistent university image. He (the cartoon) will be used as the old Nathan Forrest emblem was used," she said.

The logo using Nathan Forrest was dropped by MTSU in 1975 after protests from the Black Student Association. The association believed that the use of Forrest, one of the founders of the Ku Klux Klan, as a logo made students feel unwelcome and insulted on a supposedly equal opportunity campus.

So far there are plans to use the cartoon on the Rescue student handbook, according to Harrison, and it will also be used on plastic cups at concession stands during athletic events, and on T-shirts and decals.

"We also plan to do a decal specifically for alumni with the Raider character wearing a mortarboard," Harrison added.

South resigns position

Donald South, chairman of the sociology department for four years, is leaving MTSU to become the chairman of the sociology department at the University of Southern Alabama.

South received his B.S. degree from the University of Southern Mississippi, and his M.A. and Ph.D. from LSU.

South also served on the Professional Ethics Committee for the American Sociological Association, and will remain as a member after moving to Alabama.

Due to final exams and the end of classes, Sidelines will be published on Tuesday of next week.

Postal strike wouldn't affect MTSU

Campus post office employees and intra-campus mail will not be affected if Murfreesboro postal workers go on strike, said Kenneth Summar, postmaster.

Summar said that MTSU's postal workers are employed by MTSU, which is state-funded, and are not affected by the contract under negotiation across the country.

"The Murfreesboro post office does not anticipate a strike, Summar said. "But if they do, it will affect mail going in and out of the campus, but not mail circulation on campus."

Murfreesboro and Nashville postal officials said last week that the nationwide contract negotiations and walkouts will have "no noticeable effect in Middle Tennessee."

"We don't anticipate any problems here at all," said Norman Hutchinson, Murfreesboro postmaster.

Nashville postmaster David Huggins said he does not think Middle Tennessee is as "impacted by economic restraints" as Northern and Western metropolitan areas.

Huggins, who is also sectional center manager of the Middle Tennessee Area, said Middle Tennessee postal service salaries and wages are competitive with private sectors, and most postal employees are aware of this.

He added that about 20 positions a year are sought by more than 20,000 applicants, indicating that the positions are secure. He agreed with Hutchinson that as long as there are no more inflationary increases the additional cost of living increases will suffice.

"Our concern with all our people is to maintain reason and logic," Huggins said. "We hope the contract is ratified by the membership."

Steps taken to revitalize student ambassador program

by Valorie Vaughn

A move has begun to revitalize the student ambassador program at MTSU. "Initially the scope of things has broadened. Basically student ambassadors used to just serve in the president's box, but now we are planning to use them in a variety of ways," Dot Harrison, director of public relations said yesterday.

"The best kind of people to sell MTSU are students. They can say a whole lot more to new students than faculty or administrative people," Harrison said.

Last spring students applied for positions as student ambassadors through the public relations office. Between 25 and 30 students were chosen by Harrison and President Scarlett to be student ambassadors.

A student ambassador orientation is planned Saturday.

Student ambassadors will meet in the Administration Building Lobby in the morning and will spend the entire day touring different buildings on the MTSU campus.

They will be informed of the different functions of each office in the administration building, and will be given details on the history of MTSU. They will also meet with President Scarlett for a question and answer period concerning MTSU. At the end of the day the student ambassadors will meet with student affairs personnel including student programming and student government officials for a question and answer period.

To add to the revitalization of the student ambassadors program, a shirt has been designed for student ambassadors to wear. It shows the new raider cartoon character tipping his hat.

Clement favored in low turnout mock election held on campus

In a mock primary election held here Monday, Bob Clement won the Democratic gubernatorial race with 49 votes out of 103 cast, and Lama Alexander lead the Republicans with 15 votes.

Jake Butcher (Dem.) came in second place behind Clement with 22 votes, and then Richard Fulton (Dem.) with 11.

Other gubernatorial candidates received from 0 to 3 votes each.

Jane Eskind lead the Democratic U.S. Senate race with 38 votes, with Bill Bruce receiving 22 and J.D. Lee, 9. Howard Baker Jr. won the Republican Senate race with 16 votes.

The mock election was sponsored by Pi Kappa Delta (forensics).

MTSU receives safety award

MTSU recently received the Award of Commendation, the third award in the National College and University Safety Awards Program, sponsored by the College and University Section of the National Safety Council.

Archie Sullivan, director of Safety Section at MTSU, represented MTSU and received the award at the Campus Safety Association Conference held recently in Champaign, Ill.

The awards given are Award of Honor, Award of Merit, Award of Commendation, and President's Letter. MTSU was one of nine institutions receiving national recognition from the council.

Sullivan, in explaining the function of the safety department, commented, "Our primary objective is to reduce accidents; reducing accidents will reduce suffering and cost to the University."

Sullivan said a total of 10 accidents reported in 1974 amounted to 91 work days lost by the University employees. "The accidents ranged from cut fingers to broken toes to one serious accident where a person fell out of a window and broke his back," Sullivan said.

The campus safety section has been in operation since May 1973. A safety program for all State Universities and Community Colleges became a requirement set by the Board of Regents in July 1974, with the adoption of the 1972 Tennessee Occupational Safety and Health Act.

Her husband doesn't mind Men's team has girl catcher

by Vicki Atkinson

Another bastion of MTSU male domination has fallen, this time to a mixture of coed Cindy Charlton's guile and some male chicanery.

Charlton said she had been looking for an opportunity to play softball and talked with Mt. Sinai coach Mitch Chambers. "The sneakiest thing they did," she noted, "was not telling me there were no girls on the team. I showed up at a game and finally asked where the other girls were and my response was a great peal of laughter. Then they told me I was the only one!"

Mt. Sinai is the faculty and administration team. Charlton has played softball in high school and at the University of Tennessee. She says the game has always been one of her favorites and she shares her gusto for the sport with husband Kris.

"My husband doesn't mind at all that I'm the only girl on the team—he was all for my joining the team," she reported. Her "teammates," she said, were skeptical, but she feels she has overcome most of their fears.

There have been some rather tense moments, however. "Playing catcher was pretty scary, at first, because I wasn't used to such big guys running at me. But after I caught my first ball I wasn't scared anymore. I'm really comfortable with the team now and I'm really enjoying being on it," she said.

While Charlton is a strong supporter of women's liberation and the Equal Rights Amendment, her pioneering role in MTSU softball doesn't mean she isn't a bit lonely.

"The only thing I wish for the team and myself is that we could have a lot more girls on the team. I really think the Mt. Sinai team is working well being coed. I hope this will encourage more coed intramurals at MTSU," she said.

Until then, her advice for those searching for the Mt. Sinais on a hot summer day is quite clear: "Just go to the four different fields and look for the girl catcher. When you do, that's the Mt. Sinais."

Was mock election valid?

Only 103 students out of some 3,000 summer school students voted in Monday's mock primary election. This turnout could be the result of two things. Either students are generally apathetic or they simply didn't know about it.

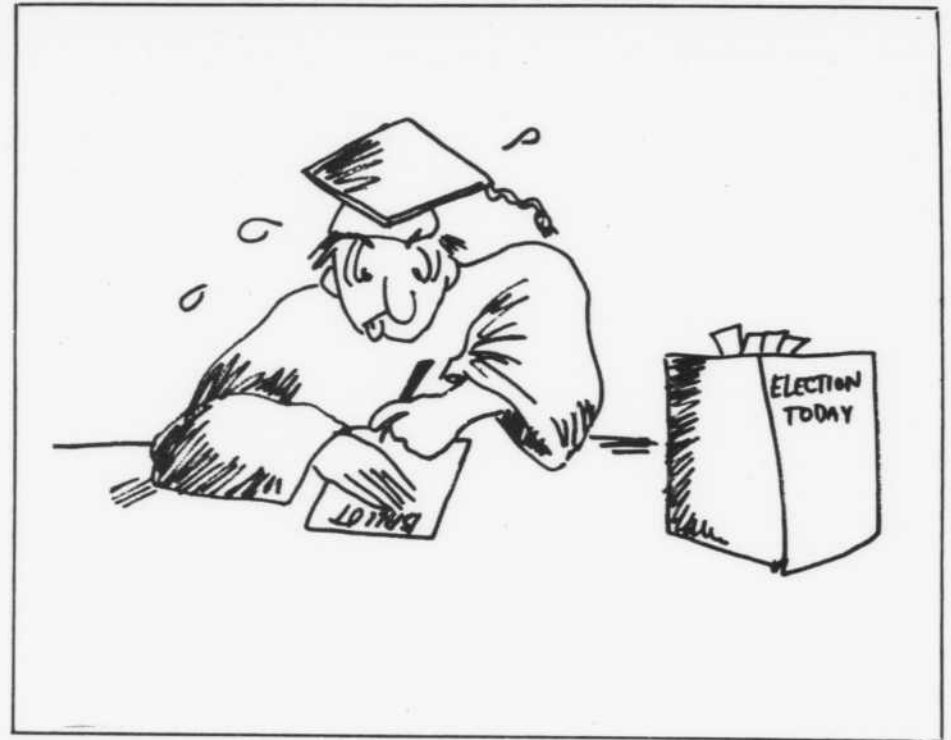

Sidelines did not know about it until we received a phone call saying that the results were in. So it seems likely that very few people knew of the election in advance and those who voted just happened to walk by at the right time.

Possibly, if the election had been publicized properly more students would have turned out to vote.

As far as apathy is concerned, a lot of students probably are apathetic, but it is hoped that voter turnout for the actual primary Thursday will be much better than it was for the mock election. Students should exercise their right to vote.

Another problem with the mock election was the counting of the votes. It seems that the Daily News Journal received slightly different totals than we did.

Because of the way the mock election was handled, Sidelines seriously doubts its validity.

Graduate endorses Clement

To the Editor:

I have had the opportunity to work this summer in the Bob Clement for Governor campaign, and as a recent graduate of MTSU, would like to convey some thoughts concerning the upcoming gubernatorial election. Bob Clement is the eldest son of former Governor Frank Clement and currently serves as Chairman of the Public Service Commission. As Chairman of the PSC, Bob has rejected over $188 million in rate increases to consumers of Tennessee.

Bob's experience in government is a very strong qualification for the Governor's office, but he has other qualities that should specifically appeal to the youth. At 34, Bob is the youngest candidate to seek the Governorship and thus can relate well to young people. Bob is a graduate of UT and earned his Masters degree in Business Administration from MSU. He is aware of and concerned about the problems confronting higher education. He has promised to work to provide more and better jobs for all Tennesseans. Bob is also the only candidate to advocate forming a youth advisory board to report directly to the Governor. This proposal assures that young people will have a greater voice in state government.

Our youth staff has had the opportunity to work closely with Bob and we have benefited greatly from his accessibility and willingness to listen to the problems of young people.

I hope the students of MTSU will take advantage of the opportunity to vote for a man who is the most qualified to solve the problems facing young people today. Bob Clement will make an outstanding Governor and deserves our support.

CORRECTION

Due to an error in paste-up, several paragraphs of last week's "Open Forum" were transposed. The correct paragraphs should read as follows:

There is also a student, who after paying for a secondhand television set, had the set taken away by the dealer, who then turned around and sold the set to someone else at a higher price. When the student inquired about his T.V., the salesman pretended that he was doing some repair work on it. When the student threatened court action in order to retrieve the set, the dealer forced the money into the student's pocket and disappeared.

A third case is that of a foreign student who complained bitterly over low quality of work and an exorbitant bill for an automobile repair. He was rebuffed and forced to pay the high bill while a revolver was held at his neck. The matter went to court, but after more than a year, it has never been called up.

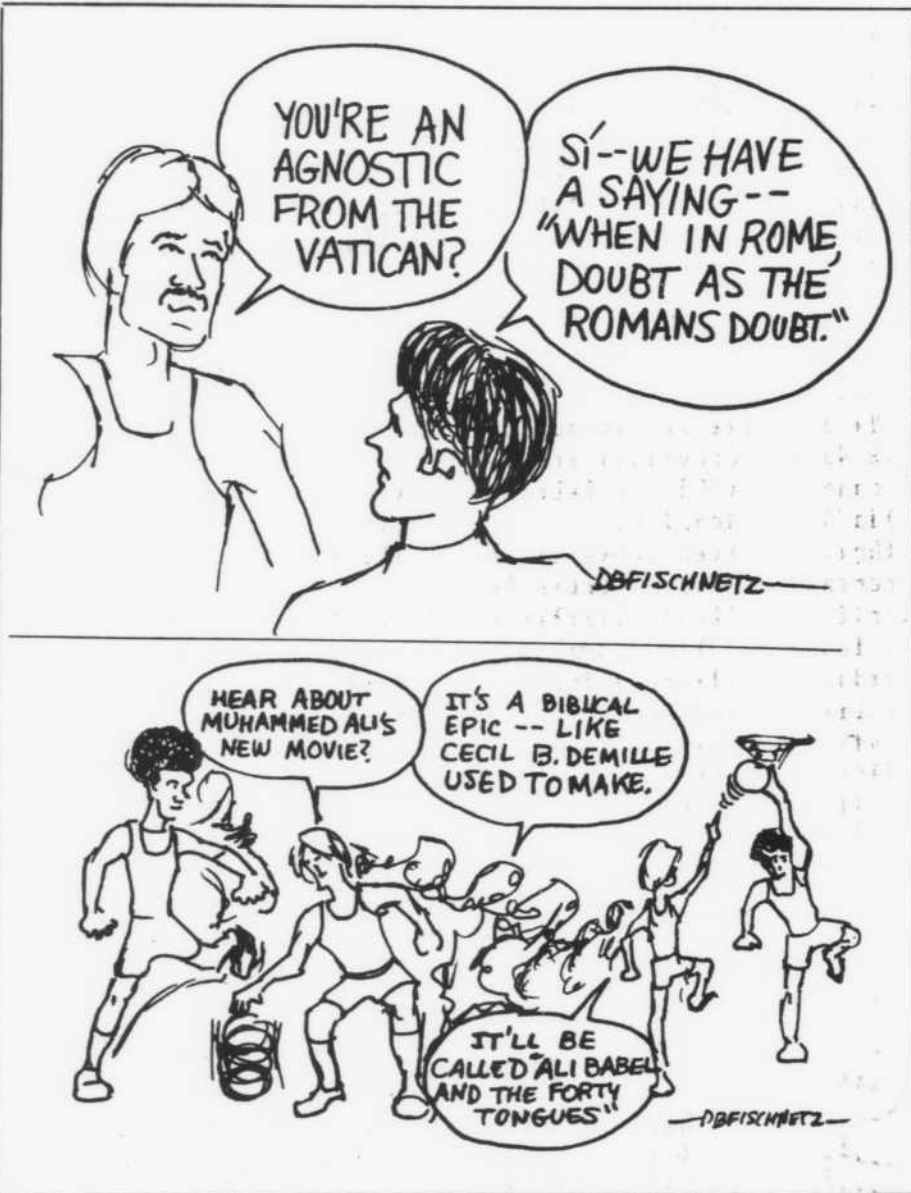

Sidelines regrets the error.

Butcher promises good, honest, decent administration

Gubernatorial hopeful Jake Butcher said last Thursday that he had strength in East and West, but thanks to the efforts of his supporters, "we're going to win Middle Tennessee."

Butcher spoke to a crowd of an estimated 6,500 who gathered at Jackson Heights Plaza for a barbecue and to hear the Democratic gubernatorial candidate.

When Butcher and his staff arrived, Hudley Crockett, an unsuccessful gubernatorial candidate in 1970 and 1974, introduced him. "Neither one of us won in 1974, but this year both of us are going to win," Crockett said.

Butcher spoke on his efforts to provide a campaign based on Christian principles and said, if elected, he would provide a "good honest decent administration."

Butcher also said that he would work to eliminate the sales tax on food for senior citizens and the handicapped, and would work to improve roads and education.

Wolfe serves as coordinator

Dr. Charles Wolfe, Middle Tennessee State University folklorist, will serve as field coordinator of a team of professional folklorists who will conduct a major documentary study during August and September of folklife along the Blue Ridge Parkway near the North Carolina-Virginia state line.

Working under the auspices of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress and the National Park Service, U. S Department of Interior, the group will examine and document the traditional life and work of area residents.

The Blue Ridge region is closely linked with the history of folklife scholarship in the United States, beginning with the early efforts of Cecil Sharp in 1916 to locate traditional British songs and continuing through more recent interdisciplinary approaches to the study of mountain culture. Unlike previous studies which have focused most often on musical traditions, the Folklife Center study is designed to provide a comprehensive view of the cultural life of the region through extensive field research and the use of existing documentation.

After the field work is completed, Wolfe will return to MTSU and be involved in writing an extensive report for the Park Service-Department of Interior on how folklore can be used to bring a humanistic dimension into park exhibits, displays, and interpretive programs, in editing a set of presentation tapes for the Park Service/Library of Congress, and in producing recordings for the Library of Congress drawn from the work done there.

Barber elected to health board

Josephine M. Barber, associate professor of health education in the HPERS department, was elected to the board of directors as the Middle Tennessee area representative, member-at-large, to the Tennessee Academy of Health Education Inc.

The election was held in conjunction with the second annual conference of the Academy at the Sheraton Hotel in Gatlinburg July 14 and 15. Dean John P. Lamb Jr., was out-going president and Dr. David T. Allen, Deputy Commissioner, Tennessee Department of Public Health, was in coming president.

Certificates of commendation and endorsement were given to State Rep. John Bragg of Murfreesboro for his efforts directed toward the health of the Tennessee people; to Dr. Robert C. Sanders of Murfreesboro for his efforts which led toward Tennessee being the first state to legislate and enforce the child restraint automobile law; to Dr. George C. Wood, director, for his efforts at the Mid South Poison Control Center in Memphis; and the Tennessee State Department of Public Health for their efforts which led toward Tennessee being the first state to require measles immunization prior to school entry by students of all ages for this coming fall.

Joe Hayes appointed to Red Cross Committee

Joe Black Hayes, associate professor of HPERS at MTSU, has been appointed as one of the members of a twenty member committee of the 1979 National American Red Cross Convention. Convention chairman Don R. Armacost selected the committee from American Red Cross Volunteers from all over the United States.

The committee will organize the 1979 National Convention, and the first meeting will be on February 8-9 in Washington, D.C.

Hayes has been active as an American Red Cross Volunteer for over 35 years. He is a member of the Tennessee Division Advisory Board in Nashville and chairman of the American Red Cross Board of Directors in Rutherford County.

Hayes was instrumental in setting up the Rutherford County Ambulance Service. He has been active in teaching First Aid, Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation (CPR) and promoting safety throughout the county. He is also secretary of the Safety Committee at MTSU.

Summer life includes a variety of activities

Summer life at MTSU means more than just going to class and cracking the books, as shown here in these pictures. [Clockwise, starting upper right] The campus pool is open to those who enjoy swimming; art student Betsy Carmichael spends her spare time painting; Lewis Thompson and Kevin Hardin take advantage of a nice day to throw horseshoes; even a game of croquet takes a lot of concentration and skill as demonstrated by Larry Carr.

Two forfeits marred the first day of play in the campus recreation softball league tournament, but they were followed by two exciting, close games.

The campus police department was scheduled to play the Big Eds to start off tournament play but forfeited their match which moves the Big Eds into tomorrow's semi-final round.

The Library also cancelled their game with the Bookstore to advance them into tomorrow's semi's.

When action finally got under way, the Cadillacs found themselves in a much tougher battle than expected with Mt. Sinai.

Sinai, who won only four games all season, hung tough throughout the early innings and held a two-run lead going into the fourth inning.

The Cadillacs rallied to tie the score and take a one-run advantage into the sixth.

With the score all knotted at eight, Mitch Chambers stroked a two out double scoring two runs, which gave Sinai an 11 to eight lead going into the seventh inning.

Moving into the top half of the seventh, the Cadillacs immediately loaded the bases and scored their next three runs on errors.

With the score tied at eleven, the Cadillacs moved runners into scoring position and Andre Bullock delivered a single to give them the lead 13-11.

Mt. Sinai failed to muster any offense in their half of the inning giving the Cadillacs the hard earned win.

The second contest of the day also provided a near upset as the Magnificent Ten took a narrow 12-11 victory over Mt. Ararat.

Ararat, who finished in the lower division in the regular season, led early but couldn't hold off their opponents in the late innings.

Second baseman Roger Vandergrat, doubled and scored to give the Magnificents their winning margin and advance them into today's semi-final round against the Bookstore.

The regular season champion Crimson Cats take the field today against the Big Eds who received a first round forfeit from the Police.

Following the Crimson Cats-Big

Eds match up, the Bookstore will take on the Magnificent Ten, followed by the Cadillacs game with the winner of the first game.

The championship game will be played on Thursday at 5:30 p.m.

Lady 'Toppers sign tallest player in school's history

Julia Yeater, Western Kentucky University women's basketball coach, has announced the signing to a letter-of-intent the Lady 'Topper's tallest player ever.

At 6-3½, Jane Lockin, Benton, Ill., will not only be the tallest player Western has ever had, she will probably be one of the tallest collegiate women players in Kentucky and the OVC next season.

During her senior year at Benton, Lockin averaged 21 points and 14 rebounds per game, while hitting 71 per cent of her field goal attempts.

She had a career single-game high of 34 points.

"The one principle ingredient our team has lacked has been size," Yeater said. "With Jane's signing, we're getting some height that has quality both on and off the court. She's just an outstanding prospect in every way."

Football field to receive new turf this week

Horace Jones Field, which houses several county football teams as well as being the home of the Blue Raiders, is scheduled to receive its new turf some time next week. [Debra Ross photo]

Plans for resurfacing Horace Jones Field are going well with the actual laying of the carpet to begin August 2 or 7, according to Charles Murphy, athletic director.

"Everything is going according to schedule right now, and if nothing goes wrong the field ought to be ready to go about August 14 at the latest," Murphy said.

The old turf, which after seven years of use had begun to split at the seams, was lifted about a month ago along with the foam backing behind it.

During the lifting of the foam, certain sections of the asphalt base crumbled and several spots had to be repaired. Officials for the Monsanto Company said this was normal and that no major damage was done.

Raider slugger will return for another season

by Scott Adams
Sports Editor

Along with the announcing of a good recruiting season, Blue Raider baseball skipper John Stanford has more good news.

All-OVC slugger Doug Hicks will definitely return to MTSU for another season.

Hicks, who broke the school record for home runs last season with 13, has lost half of his scholarship due to the reshuffling of funds to sign other athletes.

"The reason we dropped Doug's scholarship to half was mainly because we signed him as a pitcher," Stanford said. "I think Doug, himself, realizes that he can't pitch in a major four year school, although he was a pleasant surprise at the plate this year."

Before leaving for his Hamilton, Ohio, home last spring, Hicks said that he would have to "think long and hard" before he returned to MTSU, because he wasn't sure whether or not he could afford to come to school on half a scholarship.

Stanford said that Hicks would call him when he made up his mind and that is exactly what he did last week.

"Doug called me last week and told me that he was really down when he left school in the spring, but when the time came to make the decision on whether to come back to school or not, it was real easy," Stanford said.

Stanford went on to say that he felt that most of the team was down when school was over last spring because of the poor showing they made, but that a summer away from everything should really make a difference.

"It goes without saying that we wanted him back, but I doubt he'll do much pitching next season.

We'll probably just leave him on first base and hope he keeps hitting the ball like he did last season," he added.

Raiders sign last recruit

Blue Raider basketball coach Jimmy Earle has announced the signing of Indiana prep star Tim Johnson to a grant-in-aid, which will close out the recruiting campaign for Earle and his staff.

A 6'0 guard, Johnson attended Aurora (Ind.) High School, where he earned three letters in basketball and four in baseball.

During the past season, Johnson earned All-State honors in the small school classification and also an honorable mention on the All-State team covering all classifications.

While prepping at Aurora, Johnson earned All-Sectional, All-Conference twice, conference MVP twice, leading scorer in the Semi-State, All-State in his junior year, team free throw shooting award and team leading scorer for two seasons.

At 6'0, Johnson might be considered too small to play in the OVC, but, according to Earle, Johnson is a prime candidate for the backup spot at point guard next season behind senior Greg Armstrong.

Johnson joins Nate Cates, John Denen, Chris Harris and Mark Smith as Raider basketball recruits for next season.
