NASA funds center

This fall, MTSU will open the Center for the Advancement of Mathematics, Science and Technology Education in the education wing of the former Belle Aire property on Fairview Avenue.

MTSU received a $525,000 grant from NASA for the center and the College of Basic and Applied Sciences will hold an invitation-only reception to commemorate the gift. The reception will be held today from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in the State Farm Lecture Hall.

The center's mission will be to enhance the quality of mathematics, science and technology education at all levels in Tennessee.

The associate director for the center will be Cindi Smith-Walters, co-director of the Center of Environmental Education.

For more information, contact Ray Phillips at 898-8410.

Major to talk leadership

Maj. Julie S. Norman of the United States Army will appear at MTSU and talk about "Women as Leaders" today in Forrest Hall, Room MS 2 at 12:30 p.m.

Norman's visit is part of the National Women's History Month activities at MTSU.

Norman's awards and decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal, the Joint Service Commendation Medal and the Army Commendation Medal.

For more information, contact Randy Weiler at 898-2919.

Event to focus on finance

The 10th annual MTSU Financial Industry Outlook Conference will take place March 13 at the Garden Plaza Hotel in Murfreesboro at 10:45 a.m.

The conference is sponsored by MTSU's Jennings A. Jones College of Business and Weatherford Chair of Finance. The cost will be $15 per person, which includes lunch and conference materials.

The event will commence with a speech from R. Glen Hubbard, chairperson of the Council of Economic Advisers in the Bush administration.

Hubbard was confirmed by the Senate May 10, 2001, and was appointed by President Bush May 11.

Scholarships for students

The Community Foundation of Middle Tennessee is seeking applications for scholarships, provided by a fund set up in the memory of Archie Hartwell Nash. The Archie Hartwell Nash fund will award scholarships of up to $2,500 each to MTSU students, who will be selected based on merit and financial need.

His wife, Carolyn Nash, established a fund in Nash's name at the Community Foundation so scholarships could be given to help students. The deadline for applications is April 1, and applicants will be notified of the results by May 1.

For more information, contact Brenda Batey at 352-5184 or Laundrea Lewis at 321-4939. ♦

Bill limits parking ticket punishment

By Beth Davis
Contributor

The Senate Education Committee will discuss a bill today that will prohibit post-secondary schools in Tennessee from withholding academic transcripts and diplomas from students because of unpaid parking tickets.

SB 2666 is one way state lawmakers are looking for solutions to the parking problems experienced by most higher education students in Tennessee.

The bill was presented March 6 and, if passed by the committee, could directly affect MTSU. Many students and faculty believe parking on the MTSU campus is a problem.

"I think that the campus parking policy is way too strict," said sophomore Jenny Queener. "It's not like the parking fines are $5 or $10. I got a $30 or $35 ticket last year for parallel parking the wrong way. No wonder people wait so long to pay them - college students can't afford the fines."

The bill, sponsored by Sen. Jeff Miller (R-Cleveland) said that a post-secondary institution of higher learning can't refuse to issue a diploma or academic transcript based solely upon the student's failure to pay parking or traffic tickets.

Miller began his presentation by explaining his own experiences with the parking situation at the University of Tennessee-Knoxville.

"It came time for me to graduate, and I was rudely reminded of those parking tickets, which I had not had a thought about, that had accumulated some years before," he said. "They said I could not receive my diploma until I paid those parking tickets with all the penalties and interest, which accumulated to over $500."

Miller discussed some stories that he has heard from college students who were unable to transfer credits to their new schools because of parking fines at their former universities.

"I know that our post-secondary institutions need to keep order, and I know that parking is a problem on most of those campuses," Miller said. "I am just asking you to let the punishment fit the crime because students, some of which can't come up with that kind of money all at one time, might not get their diploma or transcript until they do. It is a hardship for many because for students with a valid parking pass that commute and cannot find a parking space, they are faced with the decision to miss class or get a parking ticket."

Committee member Sen. JoAnn Graves (D-Gallatin) explained the reasoning behind her disapproval of the bill. Grave's son, who is scheduled to graduate in May, has accumulated more than $400 worth of parking tickets while at college

Weil resigns from men's b-ball post

Blue Raider basketball coach Randy Weil resigned yesterday after two losing seasons at MT. His resignation followed a nine-game improvement this season over the 2001 season record of 5-22.

By Angelica Journagin
News Editor

After six seasons and an 84-90 overall record, Blue Raider head basketball coach Randy Weil resigned yesterday afternoon with two years remaining in his contract.

"In coaching, there is a lot of turnover, and it usually happens every five years, and I have been at Middle Tennessee for six," Weil said.

Weil coached his last game with the Blue Raiders March 3 against New Mexico State University in the second round of the Sun Belt Conference Tournament. The Blue Raiders lost 63-48 to end their season with a 14-15 record.

This followed a 2000-2001 season that saw the men's basketball team beat the school record of 22 losses, including a 15-game losing streak.

"Basically, Randy had six years trying to get the program moving in the right direction, and he hasn't been able to do that," said Athletics Director Boots Donnelly.

Weil came to MT from the University of North Carolina Asheville, where, in his three years as head coach, he improved the team's record from 3-24 to 18-10. In his six years at MT, Weil has had three winning seasons, including two 19-win seasons in his first two years.

"In my six years, we have had some good seasons, but this just goes with coaching," Weil said. "The 2000-2001 season was not what Middle Tennessee fans are accustomed to, and it was very hard for them."

For the past couple of months, the Daily News Journal, Murfreesboro's daily paper, has been running an online poll asking readers if Weil should be fired.

Despite this, Donnelly said the decision for Weil to resign was not a result of outside pressure.

After talking to Donnelly, Weil held a meeting with the basketball team to break the news to them. Senior center Lee Nosse said he was shocked to learn about Weil's resignation.

"It's unfortunate because he was a good guy," Nosse said about Weil. "I was surprised because I thought that they would at least give him another year. I mean, last year I was hurt, and he [Weil] was training a lot of new guys. This year we didn't have Glasper. There is just a lot of little things going on that people don't see."

Further hurting the team this year was the suspension of star senior forward Iiro Tenngren for violating team rules and personal reasons.

"For the first time, it made me think about more than just basketball," Nosse said.

Donnelly said MT would be honoring the remainder of Weil's contract, dependent on whether he finds a new job, which would make his current contract with the university null and void.

"My relationship with Weil, knowing him as I have, he is an absolute credit to the program," Donnelly said. "The ability to win games is extremely tough. To see a guy with coach Weil's character ... he is an excellent guy and excellent basketball coach."

MT will advertise for the next two weeks for a new head coach before making their cut, Donnelly said.

"I appreciate the opportunity given to me by former President Dr. James Walker and former Athletics Director Lee Fowler," Weil said. "There are some who feel a change is needed and the program needs to go in another direction."

"I just hope they give the next coach time to turn it around." ♦

Past college deans honored at groundbreaking

By Amber Bryant
Staff Writer

The College of University Honors will officially begin building its new home near the John Bragg Mass Communication Building today.

"I think [the building is] symbolic of our commitment to academic excellence at MTSU," said June McCash, who founded the honors program and served as director until 1980.

The $4 million structure is planned to include a tower for thesis defense conferences, patio area, student lounge with a fireplace, library and an amphitheater, in addition to classrooms and faculty offices. The building is estimated to be completed during the fall of 2003.

"What the university is trying to do with this building is put faculty and students together so they can make up the atmosphere one would expect at a small, private college," said John Paul Montgomery, dean of the honors college.

The honors program has grown more than 500 percent in the past 10 years, adding more than 700 students since it was founded in 1973. The program became the College of University Honors in 1998.

The idea of a new building was presented to Montgomery by Paul Martin Jr., the first honors program graduate, and his brother, Lee. In July 2000, they donated $2 million, provided that the university match it before the end of the year 2001. The building is dedicated to the memory of their father, Paul Martin Sr.

"It's really gratifying that one of our students thought enough of the program to want to see it continue," said Ron Messier, a history professor who directed the honors program from 1980 until 1991.

Alumni, students, faculty, community members and local businesses provided the remainder of the funding needed to put the building plans into action. The final $250,000 was given by the Andrew Woodfin Miller Foundation at the beginning of December.

The college currently has a committee dedicated to producing ideas to enhance upper-

MT Poll finds income tax opposition growing in state

By Lindsey Turner
Managing Editor

Tennesseans still oppose a state income tax but are more willing to favor a flat tax than a graduated one, according to this semester's MT Poll.

Fifty-eight percent of respondents said they opposed the general idea of an income tax. However, of those 58 percent in opposition, some are willing to negotiate — if an income tax would mean ending the sales tax on groceries and lowering the sales tax on other items, the opposition rate drops to 38 percent. Support for an income tax grew to 52 percent when the respondents were asked about enacting an income tax if all the proceeds went to benefit education.

Ken Blake, assistant professor of journalism and operations manager of the poll, said the ambivalence over an income tax poses a puzzling dilemma.

"In short, a state income tax is kind of like cough medicine," he said. "The general idea may be repulsive, but it's possible to come up with flavors that people find palatable — and even desirable."

Blake said he was surprised that support for a flat tax had a broad base of support.

"Poorer Tennesseans are just as likely as wealthier Tennesseans to favor a flat income tax, even though a flat income tax, in theory, is more financially stressful for the poor," Blake said.

Fifty-nine percent of respondents said they preferred a flat tax over a graduated one.

Blake said he assumed that respondents would prefer either a flat or a graduated income tax based on their personal level of income, meaning that poorer respondents would prefer a graduated tax, which charges wealthier people more per dollar of income than poorer people, and wealthier respondents would prefer a flat tax, which charges everyone the same percentage of their income.

The poll also found something Blake said he fully expected — support for the U.S. military strikes in Afghanistan remains high, at 86 percent.

However, the poll was taken before seven U.S. soldiers died fighting Taliban and al-Qaida forces, Blake noted.

"If deaths among U.S. soldiers mount, the support registered here may prove to be a high-water mark," he said. Support for military action declines slightly to 75 percent if other countries, such as Iraq, Somalia, the Philippines and others are involved.

The poll also found that:

- Sixty-seven percent of state residents believe the state faces a fiscal crisis, up from 59 percent in October 2001.
- Nearly half — 47 percent — of the state's residents say the national economy is getting better, compared to 42 percent in fall 2001. However, Republicans were more likely to describe the national economy as improving than were non-Republicans.

• Fifty-two percent of Tennesseans believe the U.S. Constitution unconditionally protects journalists' rights to criticize politicians. In the fall, just 41 percent felt this way.

• The phrase, "God bless America," means many things to many different people, with 28 percent of respondents considering the phrase religious, 38 percent considering it patriotic and 24 percent considering it to mean something else altogether. Ten percent said they have no idea what the phrase means.

The poll was conducted by students from Feb. 18 to March 1. The students interviewed 742 Tennesseans age 18 or older by phone. The poll has an error margin of plus/minus 4 percentage points at the 95 percent level of confidence. To view the complete results, visit www.mtsu.edu/mtpoll.

because he chose not to park in the outlying parking lots.

"If a school doesn't have any way to require a student to pay those parking fines, I can assure you that my son probably would have walked away from those fines," Graves said. "I think, as a citizen, we all have to learn that there are rules that do inconvenience us and do make life difficult, but if we choose to embrace going to college, then we have to learn to be inconvenienced sometimes."

"I think that it will be a real travesty to say that a college has no ability to collect fines that are due because students would choose not to follow the rules," Graves said.

Senior Jim Cantrell is one student who has chosen to park in one of MTSU's outer lots.

"I have to get up earlier, and I have to walk a lot further, but I haven't gotten a ticket this year, and I never have to worry about not finding a parking place," Cantrell said.

Not all students at MTSU feel this way.

"I have been at MTSU for almost two years and have paid probably $200 in parking tickets," junior Derrick Greene said.
"There might be parking available on the outside lots, but by the time you walk in from those lots, you are late for class."

Sen. Larry Trail (D-Murfreesboro) did not comment on the bill except to ask that it be moved to next year's academic calendar due to the lack of a fiscal note on the bill.

The sponsor denied that request but agreed to have the bill rolled one week in order to allow the Tennessee Board of Regents and other higher education officials a chance to discuss the bill in private. ♦

Academic Profile should count for something

All graduating seniors are required to take the Academic Profile test before receiving their degree at MTSU.

The Academic Profile tests seniors on their knowledge of the general studies courses that they probably took in their first two years at the university.

Seniors are not graded on this test. In fact, students must make special requests to see their scores. The whole purpose of the test is research. Should seniors perform well enough on the test, the university could receive extra funding.

Quite frankly, the Academic Profile is pointless. There is absolutely no incentive to take the hourlong test that the information packet said would be 40 minutes.

Seniors can't be kept from graduating because they did poorly on the test. Still, you have to take the test to graduate.

Seniors also are required to stay the full hour instead of being allowed to leave when they're done with the test. I suppose this ensures that the seniors will give their best effort instead of randomly marking answers.

The test has a moderator who tells you when to open your test booklet and when to put your pencil down. This makes the Academic Profile seem much like the ACT, but at least the ACT counted for something.

Seniors are being tested on things they've probably already forgotten or haven't had since high school. Let's face it - not everyone gets out of college in four years.

For their troubles, the Alumni Association gives seniors a decal sticker with Lightning on it. I guess we forget our school pride while taking this pointless test.

A gift from the Alumni Association only adds insult to injury. All seniors know that in three months they'll start receiving those annoying phone calls asking for money for the university.

Like new graduates have any money. Most are either still looking for a job or struggling with the low-paying job they received after graduation.

There also are these things called student loans that seniors have to start paying back six months after graduation.

Perhaps making the test worth something will help performance and seniors' efforts. Don't hinder graduation, but give them something more than a decal sticker of our mascot. ♦

From the Opinions Editor

Read this before sending in your letter to the editor

I've been opinions editor for some time now, and it has become clear to me that the university community needs a quick journalism lesson.

First, you will never, and I mean never, see an article on the opinions page. There are columns (such as from Alan Slone today), there are editorials (such as the one from the Editorial Board above) and there are letters to the editor.

All articles are reports of facts and occasionally comments of observers or experts in a field.

All columns are persuasive pieces of writing, designed to get the reader to at least consider a new point of view. Good columns report facts, like articles, but they also express opinions.

I like keeping things fair and balanced on my page. Unlike FOX News, I mean that.

In a letter today, Chris Schneider pines for rebuttals to columns written by Nick Teply. I welcome Schneider, or anyone else on campus, to write in a 500-700 word rebuttal to Teply's columns, and I'll run it, space permitting.

Contrary to what some may believe, I do not possess a magic hat, out of which I can pull columns. I force my writers to express their own ideas, and I print all but the occasional militant, racist piece.

The point of having an opinions section, I have come to realize, is to encourage thought and debate among students on campus. Some things that get printed may shock you, some things may be exactly what you were thinking, but all intelligent, rational, informed opinions have a right to be heard.

I stand behind and support all of my columnists, from the feminists to the arch conservatives, but I also would love to see the rest of campus take an active part in this page by responding to what we run not with complaints of bias, but with informed opinions of their own. ♦

This column will make you feel smarter

Panic Office

Alan Slone
Staff Columnist

Lacking real ideas for a column, I thought that I might collect some of the more colorful newsworthy items of the week.

According to a Reuters report, a computer specialist was charged last Thursday with 68 counts of mail and wire fraud after the U.S. Army realized it was paying for a sex show Web site the specialist was running. Gilbert Benjamin got the high-speed line from the Army simply by telling them that it was used for communicating with forces in Bosnia.

First of all, let me applaud this man. Anyone with enough balls to ask the Army to pay for their web services should get the senior most on principle. Think of it - of all the organizations in the world you'd think of duping, does the army of the leading nation in the free world really top your list? I didn't think so.

Also, what does this say about the Army? If one of the most powerful armies in the world is handing out high-speed Internet access to anyone just based on their word, what else are they handing out? I wonder if I can get a tank with the line, "Hey, I need one of your tanks to fight the war on drugs."

In the theme of military faux pas, another Reuters report details how the Canadian Navy (motto: "We're not a world superpower, and we know it") purchased four (and I am not making this up) "mothballed" diesel-powered submarines from England in 1998. There's nothing really wrong with this, except that during the first training run, one of them sprang two leaks. While nobody was in danger, this hasn't been the first of the HMCS Windsor's problems. When Canada first acquired the Windsor, its maiden voyage from England to Canada under Canadian command was a "nightmare." Among other things, the submarine leaked hydraulic fluid, the radar mast leaked and had to be fixed with duct tape and a garbage bag and another piece of faulty equipment had to be unjammed with (what else?) a hockey stick.

I'm not a person to attack our neighbor to the north, but you have to think that this doesn't help their image in the world's eyes. Most Americans already think that Canadians aren't the brightest crayons in the box, but buying decrepit submarines from another country? The fact that one of the crewmen accidentally "flipped the wrong switch," sending 530 gallons of seawater into a battery compartment didn't help either.

The Reuters story quoted Defense Minister Art Eggleton as calling the buy "a bargain." England, on the other hand, said of the Canadians... well, nothing, because they were laughing too hard to really comment. Besides, they'd sold the four floaters for $475 million in U.S. funds - approximately two billion Canadian dollars.

But with all this extra wealth, it seems that the English don't have much more than their Canadian counterparts. In yet another Reuters article, two British inventors have invented a device that, when strapped to your wrist, will help guide you to the nearest bar. Called eSleeve, the contraption uses Global Positioning Satellite technology to guide the drunken revelers to both bars and home.

This is pure genius. First of all, these things would make a killing at Spring Break, with only a few minor adjustments. Of course, there'd have to be a beer-goggle attachment, where the computer would take a picture of a person and then show you an "enhanced" photo to let you know just how ugly they really are. Second of all, there'd need to be tracking devices on all the police around - giving you the ability to know just exactly where John Q. Law was planning on busting up your drunken debauchery. Lastly, it would need a voice-disguising device so that when your girlfriend/boyfriend calls to see how much you miss them, they won't be able to hear the new hottie you picked up in the back-ground.

Sometimes the stupidity of the world makes it too easy for people like me to make fun of their actions. Let this be a lesson. ♦

Letters to the Editor

Privatization of Social Security bad

To the Editor:

Nick Teply's statements on Social Security proves that the way he sees things is with distorted vision. Teply wants to fully privatize Social Security and keep paying current retirees their benefits.

One problem - if we totally privatize Social Security, we do not have the money to pay current benefits unless we want a massive tax increase. The other option would be to run deficits in excess of $500 billion a year.

Second, he tries to convince people that their employer match is coming from them. I doubt people would get a pay raise if employers no longer had to match Social Security contributions. He claims returns on Social Security is meager, when in fact people often get more than they pay in. Then he attacks Sen. Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) for criticizing privatization. Let's look at the real facts and see if privatization is good. First, stocks decline one out of every four years, proving them to be risky.

Look at Enron employees who lost everything when the company's stock dropped. Right now Social Security is guaranteed by the U.S. government, which has never gone back on that promise. Second, the "doomsday" predictions on Social Security are based on economic predictions that say the economy will grow at half the rate it has the past 50 years. That is extremely unlikely, and if it happens, privatizing social security will not be very helpful.

Finally, if we keep all the surpluses, Social Security runs until 2016. Social Security will not become insolvent. The only accounting trick on Social Security is that the government is paying down other debts with it, paying down higher interest debt and paying Social Security back with lower interest rates.

Thomas Hoffman

Keep things balanced in opinions

To the Editor:

I think a student-run newspaper is important; it gives future journalists experience for their future careers, and it gives the students a chance to talk about issues that are important to them. That's why I have a problem with Sidelines' opinions section.

Nick Teply, who I have never met and bear no ill will toward, has repeatedly written his uninformed, racist, conservative columns in your opinions section with seemingly no rebuttal or opposing viewpoint. Having been offended almost every time I have read his columns, I'm simply amazed that Sidelines would even print such columns.

I am no journalist, but I even know that while his columns are simply opinions, the media have a responsibility to be objective as possible, especially in dealing with sensitive issues such as abortion and the "war on terrorism." The media should feel obligated to play point/counterpoint with such issues by giving opposing viewpoints on such issues because they play such a key role in what their audience thinks about. When the audience only thinks about something in one way, the media haven't done their job.

Not to mention that I seriously doubt Teply's views are representative of the majority of people on campus, certainly not mine. I guess what I'm trying to say is, that in the name of objective, fair journalism, please post opposing viewpoints in the opinions section so that our paper doesn't become a vehicle for conservative politics.

Thank you for your time,

Chris Schneider

SGA and its elections waste of time

To the Editor:

I'm not so sure that student apathy toward the Student Government Association is such an absurd notion. Students don't care about the SGA because, quite frankly, the candidates don't give them any reason to. I've witnessed two SGA elections at this school and, from what I can gather, it has been largely reduced to a popularity contest. To me, the word "election" conjures up images of people with agendas and purposes working hard to make those agendas and purposes known, discussing issues and providing credible reasons why we should choose them to represent us.

What I witness in reality is a bunch of nameless, faceless, nomadic students roaming aimlessly around the Keathley University Center and posting flyers asking people to vote for them. Without reason, explanation, addressing any issues or serious campaigning, they are only able to utter, "Have you voted in the SGA election? No? My name is John Q. Student. Vote for me. Thanks." Not only does this appear lazy and uninspiring, it's only done at the last minute on Election Day, which makes it seem that much more pathetic and trifling. And you expect the student body to take this hoax of an election seriously by showing up en masse at the ballot box? You must be kidding.

If I walked up to you on the street and said, "Do you have a financial adviser? No? Well, my name is Kia. I need a job right away. Hire me," would you take me seriously? I doubt it, and I would hope not.

How about giving people a reason to vote. Posting some flyers telling people why they should vote (for you) would be a good start. Having some sort of campaigning issue, stance or at least some idealistic election fluff would be a nice second step.

Even then, you have to dig pretty deep to find anything of interest or use that the SGA actually accomplishes. The plus/minus grading system and tree printing could arguably be categorized as "important," but give me a break. Few professors used the system and fewer students really gave a damn anyway. And personally, I have more important things to worry about than the price of paper in the computer labs.

Short of those two nuggets, the SGA is nothing more than resume filler for whomever can hand out the most flyers at the KUC on election day. The fact is that if the SGA election is a joke, it's because SGA and its candidates make it a joke.

Warm heart touches the lives of others

Resident helps community by offering free child-care

Priscilla Brown offered free child-care for parents.

By Charlene Callier

Cotton fields. Wash tubs. Cedar bush brooms.

These are words that most people have only heard through stories, documentaries or history books, but to Priscilla Brown, these are images of her childhood.

Brown invited me into her cozy home and offered me a seat on one of her couches, pointing to the article on the wall.

"I always look at my picture on the wall for being honored as an Unsung Hero last year at the luncheon," she said.

She was awarded a plaque at a luncheon in her recognition for being one of the five Unsung Heroes during Black History Month in February 2001 at MTSU.

Brown was honored for being very active in her church and keeping hundreds of children in her home without charging parents throughout the years.

"I love children, and I will never charge," Brown said.

"I will keep them as long as the parents tell them to send me."

She said that, after her husband died, she became lonely and a girl came to her and said she wanted to go back to school but didn't have a babysitter.

Brown agreed to keep the child for no charge, so the girl could return to school and get her education.

She reflected on the days of her childhood and said that there were happy memories. Brown said she knows it's hard for a lot of people out there and she just wants to help them out.

Although Brown lived in a one-room house with her three siblings and mother and father, with the kitchen attached separately, there was still room for love.

Sam and Priscilla Marble had four children who lived with them on the land owned by L.W. Hanes in a log cabin.

"I was named after my mother, Priscilla," Brown said.

"I wasn't a slave, but my daddy was," she said.

"We lived back in the slavery times, because we were on the farm of the man that used to own my daddy."

Brown said snow would fall through the holes of their one-room log cabin, but they stayed warm because of the fireplace.

"We didn't have to look outside to see if it was snowing," Brown said.

"We could just look by our beds to see if snow was on the floor."

She said there was always plenty of firewood around to be used to keep the house warm.

Brown reflected on the summer times when they would gather Cedar bushes to sweep the inside of the cabin.

She said her mother could bake cakes for Christmas in November and they would still be fresh in December.

"Now, a cake won't last a week," Brown chuckled as she leaned back into her armchair.

She said they would kill hogs and cut them up and hang the meat in a barn crib and that's the way they would eat during the winter.

"We would always let our company eat first and the family would eat last," Brown said.

"I remember Mondays being wash day," Brown said. "We would scrub the clothes in a wash tub and scrub board."

She said sometimes they would walk three miles to Smyrna to wash clothes for 25 cents.

Brown dropped out of Lillard Chapel in the third grade to take care of her sick mother.

"Small family," she explained. "When one got sick we would all be there."

After her mother's death, the family moved into a two-bedroom cabin until they got old enough to move out on their own.

Brown married Frank Brown in 1941 and the couple had two children, the Rev. John E. Brown and Ernestine Brown, both of whom are active in the church.

Once married, Brown and her husband picked and chopped cotton and milked cows on their farm.

After three years of farming, they moved to Murfreesboro and into her house, paying only $25 a month.

"We paid $25 a month for this house for 10 years," Brown said.

"Frank was making $14 a week by working at Goldstein, the clothing store on the square, and I was making $6 cooking at the L & M Café on the square," she said.

"I would sometimes go cook for a lady on Main Street for 75 cents a week," she said.

"It's funny how these kids complain about money these days. Back then we had to just make ends meet."

She said she understands the struggle a lot of people endure when it comes to avoiding a babysitter. That's why she kept children for working parents or those going to school.

According to Brown, word got out and that's how the babysitting process began.

She said she would never worry about food because when churches and other people heard about what she was doing they would donate food so the children could eat.

"I would just tell the parents, to give to me when you can," Brown said.

She said her good fortune continues until this day because although she loves to cook, people still bring her food.

"This morning a lady just dropped off a pan of baby-back ribs," Brown said, "and last night someone brought me a pan of spaghetti."

Priscilla can no longer baby-sit children because at the ripe age of 83 she has endured some complications with her health that won't allow it.

She said that, on May 24, last year, they put her in the hospital because she had a blood clot close to her heart.

A smirk crossed her face as she sits back in her chair.

"They thought I was leaving this place," she said.

"I just kept smiling at them and told them to read 1 John 5:14."

"That's why I'm sitting here today, on his will," Brown said.

Priscilla said she doesn't like to watch television, but she listens to the radio and reads a lot of books.

As for now, she relaxes, drives around the neighborhood with her great-granddaughter and cleans the house.

Financially, she is taken care of by her and her husband's Social Security checks.

"It's a blessing," she said. "I don't have to ask for nothing." ♦

Chris Isaak returns after four-year hiatus

Chris Isaak's new CD, Always Got Tonight, focuses on love and heartache. This is his first release with new producer John Shanks after a four-year rest from the industry.

By Eric Allen
Staff Writer

Chris Isaak's Always Got Tonight is his first recording after a four-year absence.

Tonight is Isaak's eighth release and his first with producer John Shanks, and the change is easily noticeable. The opening track, "One Day," kicks off the new set like an uncorked bottle of champagne. The time off and a new producer have helped make this collection his strongest work to date.

Isaak wrote every song himself with the exception of a co-writer credit on one of the album's highlights, "Cool Love." Other key tracks include the first single, "Let Me Down Easy," "American Boy" and the closing song, "Nothing To Say."

The overall tone throughout is love and heartache, but pain has never sounded so good as it does in these beautifully crafted melodies. The material is both slow and upbeat, which keeps the listener from getting bored.

As always, Isaak's voice is the star here, although his lyrics run a close second for top billing in this well written and executed performance.

This is easily Isaak's most consistent of all of his recordings, and it's hard to imagine what lies next. There is not much room for improvement. In fact, I find it a little disappointing to go backward and revisit his catalog after being spoiled with the giant leap forward made here.

For the many fans of "Wicked Games," his most haunting ballad to date, I suggest giving Always Got Tonight a listen.

If you have ever considered purchasing a Chris Isaak CD, this is the one I give my personal recommendation. I don't think anyone will regret taking the time to give this album a number of spins. ♦

"The Business of Strangers"

The Business of Strangers tries to take the formula of the classic In the Company of Men and adapt it to focus on females in the modern corporate world. But despite strong performances from the leads, it fails to deliver on the scathing results of In the Company of Men.

The film deals with a small number of characters and follows their exploits throughout one night of scheming and drinking and plays almost like a stage drama.

Julie, played by Stockard Channing, is the head of a company who is pitching a new idea to a committee. However, it ultimately fails because her assistant Paula (Julia Stiles) shows up late, and the presentation is without visuals because of her mishap. In one of many scathing scenes, Julie heartlessly insults and fires Paula in front of the colleagues. What Julie didn't expect, though, was that Paula would be just as hardened as she is.

Despite the failed sales pitch, Julie is promoted to head of the company, leaving her old position unfilled. She learns that Paula is the leading candidate for her job. The new promotion gives Julie new hope, and upon seeing Paula reject a man at the hotel bar, she gains a new respect for her and the two begin to bond. One key similarity is a shared hatred for a male co-worker, Nick. The two begin a hideous plot to get revenge on him and, it seems, on men in general.

The premise sounds like a good one, but in the end, it just isn't fulfilling enough. What made In the Company of Men so effective was the fact that the actions of those characters were mostly unwarranted. They did evil things to women "because they could," and their tricks were unfathomable in the amount of pain they caused. Paula and Julie both seem to have good reasons for what they do to Nick, so it made me sympathize with them and justify what they did. Also, what they eventually do to Nick is more of a spur of the moment, childish prank than a thought-out, nefarious plot.

Both Channing and Stiles are excellent in the movie, especially Stiles. Originally, I didn't think I would be able to accept her as a powerful member of the business world, especially after seeing her in many teen movies. But she overcomes her age to give a convincing performance. However, the themes of power and control get to be a little too obvious, and the story is not nearly as effective as it should have been. There is much to be admired in The Business of Strangers, but it is just not individual enough to be special.

"The Endurance"

Proving once again that truth is stranger (and more entertaining) than fiction, The Endurance is the best documentary film of the year.

The film chronicles the two year expedition by Ernest Shackleton and 27 other men of Antarctica. The frozen continent had already been discovered, and he had already attempted the trip twice, so many were unsure of his reasons for embarking on this deadly trip. The advertisements he posted to hire people to go with him included disclaimers, noting the bitter cold, complete darkness and doubtful return. Yet he collected a fine group of men who undertook this difficult task.

Named after Shackleton's family motto, "by endurance we conquer," The Endurance departed in 1914 on a 1,500-mile journey across the sea and the continent of Antarctica. Just 100 miles short of their destination, the ship ran into heavy ice and, despite days of hacking away, was eventually frozen in place and subsequently collapsed into the ocean. This led to extensive periods of being stranded, valiant rescue attempts and despair. Just when things couldn't get any worse, they do; and it's all entirely truthful.

Besides being an amazing story of discovery and bravery, the film is remarkable to look at. Some parts of the movie were filmed during the modern day; others are photographs of the expedition with voice-overs of journal entries. But the most fascinating part is the actual footage from the trip. Film nearly 100 years old shows men pulling sleds packed with snow, playing with the dogs and putting on plays and conducting haircutting tournaments.

Movie: Films hit box office

But child-like playfulness makes their accomplishments even more extraordinary.

What makes the film even more admirable is its balance of entertainment and education. It plays like the greatest of mystery films, constantly leaving the audience wondering what will happen next and if the men will make it home alive. But it also contains a plethora of information. It would be perfect for the classroom and achieves the rare task of teaching while never becoming boring.

The Endurance is highly recommended as it is beautiful and interesting, while remaining highly original as far as documentaries go. ♦

Young actress hits TPAC's stage this month in 'Mamma Mia'

Photo provided
Kristie Marsden portrays Sophie in Mamma Mia at the Tennessee Performing Arts Center.

By Mike Barbieri
Staff Writer

In case you haven't heard, Mamma Mia is the musical based on the greatest hits of the Swedish disco phenomenon ABBA.

It has been called "irresistible" by The New York Post, "high-energy" by Time and "fabulous, funny and endlessly clever" by The Washington Post. Now on its second U.S. tour, Mamma Mia is coming to the Tennessee Performing Arts Center's Jackson Hall March 13-24.

For this occasion, I was able to chat with Kristie Marsden, the actress playing the "quirky, mischievous" protagonist, Sophie. We conducted our interview via telephone, as she was in her hotel room in Providence, R.I. To begin, I asked her to tell me a little bit about herself.

"I'm 20 years old," she said. I stopped her. I had reviewed her bio, which was quite impressive, including film, television and theater credits. Here is an actress, who has starred in The Music Man, shown up in television programs and is playing the lead in ABBA's musical, and she's only 20.

I had to ask her if she even knew who ABBA was. Don't let her age fool you. She's articulate, professional and wise in the ways of show business. However, she does possess a certain charisma and a delightful Canadian accent.

Marsden is a native of Vancouver, B.C., known to many as "Hollywood North." This is where her performance career began.

Initially a dancer, she took lessons in singing and acting and became a triple threat bound for the stage and screen. Her advice to those trying to "make it" is "dedicate yourself to your craft." She urges performers to get out there and see what others are doing because it's always a learning experience.

"Even if it's bad," she said, "because then you can see what doesn't work." She also advises that you audition and make yourself seen. That's how she unexpectedly got the lead in The Music Man.

When Mamma Mia went searching for its sixth cast, it branched out from New York, sending casting crews to major U.S. and Canadian cities. Marsden auditioned in Vancouver and hit pay dirt.

She now has a contract signed until March of 2003. Marsden said she feels that fate had a hand in casting her in a show of this magnitude.

While she depends on her talent, charm and fate to get cast, she relies on Starbucks to keep her going.

If you don't happen to run into her at a coffee house and you'd like to check out a new musical that's getting great reviews, you can find Marsden at TPAC in mid-March.

Mamma Mia will be at TPAC March 13-17 at 8 p.m. Wednesday-Saturday and at 7:30 p.m. Sunday with a 2 p.m. matinee Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. It will play March 19-24 at 8 p.m. Tuesday-Saturday, at 2 p.m. Saturday and Sunday and at 7:30 Sunday night. For tickets to the show, contact ticketmaster at 255-ARTS or at www.ticketmaster.com. ♦

Committee should have given 'Zags better seed

The NCAA tournament brackets were announced Sunday and with it, all the drama and rhetoric temporarily ended.

The selection committee constantly cries that they love the Mid-major conference teams, despite the fact that the committee is made up entirely of power conference members.

Lee Fowler, former MT athletics director and chairman of the men's selection committee, has said repeatedly all factors would be looked at. For reference, Fowler's Wolfpack of North Carolina State made the dance.

Butler (25-5) of the Horizon League did not. NC State certainly deserved to be in. Boston College (19-10), a team that has consistently underachieved all season, did not. And what about Gonzaga (29-3)?

The nation's sixth-ranked team in the Associated Press Poll got snubbed, with the "bracketeers" giving the Bulldogs a No. 6 seed, the equivalent of the 21st- to 24th-best team in the nation.

John Feinstein, coincidentally author of A Season on the Brink that has been hyped as a movie the past eight months on ESPN, cried foul at the 'Zags low rating.

On National Public Radio, Feinstein called the committee's actions disgraceful, along with giving Cincinnati the No. 1 regional seed over Oklahoma, which beat the hottest team in the nation (Kansas) Sunday.

But, back to the 'Zags. They've been to three consecutive Sweet 16s and narrowly lost to Connecticut in the regional finals in 1999. The Huskies went on to win the National Championship, albeit at Duke's expense (where were the referees that day?).

Not into recent history? How about this season.

The 'Zags have played one of the toughest non-conference schedules in the nation and have lost just once since the Great Alaskan Shootout, you know, the tournament that mathematically eliminated Tennessee in November.

That one loss was to Pepperdine, which got a No. 10 seed in the tournament. They beat the Waves twice, most recently in the conference tournament to avenge the loss.

That was Gonzaga's last game in the West Coast Conference championship. And, it was a barn burner.

Dan Dickau, a possible first-team All-American, was having a horrendous game, shooting just 1-for-5 in the first half and scoring just 2 points.

The Waves, coached by former NBA Sonics coach Mike Westphal, had built a strong seven-point lead with about 15 minutes remaining.

That's when Dickau took the game over.

In a little more than six minutes, Dickau dropped 21 points, and the 'Zags went from minus 7 to plus 11.

Dickau finished the second half with 27 points and the Bulldogs went on to their 29th win, 96-90.

Gonzaga has played Cinderella so many times that the committee is running out of glass slippers.

This year, everyone knows the 'Zags will have to be reckoned with. Why didn't the committee see it that way?

Men's NCAA Tournament action begins Saturday with the round of 64.

Lady Raiders place 2nd

By Colleen Cox
Sports Editor

The Lady Raider softball team finished second in the silver bracket at the Florida State Invitational in Tallahassee, Fla., Sunday.

Middle Tennessee beat Southeastern Louisiana 2-0 Sunday morning to advance to the finals of the silver bracket. Jennifer Martinez (9-2) pitched a complete game shutout, giving up just 3 hits and striking out 12.

The Lady Raiders scored their 2 runs in the top of the third.

Lisa Sherman walked and moved to second on a wild pitch. Steffi Silva singled, advancing Sherman to third. Martinez hit a sacrifice fly to center, scoring Sherman.

Lindsay Azevedo singled, putting runners at first and third.

After a pitching change, Silva scored on a wild pitch. Azevedo went 3-for-3 in the game.

MT lost in the finals 6-0 to Auburn. Kristin Keyes (8-3) threw a complete game shutout, giving up just 2 hits.

Auburn struck first in the second inning, putting 1 run on the board.

Paige Jones started the inning drawing a walk. After a sacrifice bunt, pinch runner Kari Williams stole third and scored on a throwing error by the catcher.

The Tigers scored another run in the sixth. Ashley Moore singled and advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt. Moore went to third on another wild pitch. Kasey Angulo doubled to score Moore.

Auburn added 4 more runs in the seventh to take the silver bracket title. Deni Zeigler reached base on an error. Kelly Sutton hit a two-run home run. Pinch-hitter Sara Dean singled. Moore followed with another two-run homer.

Danielle DeCamino and Silva collected the only Lady Raider hits against Auburn.

Martinez took the loss, pitching 4 innings and giving up 1 run on 1 hit.

Stayc Preator pitched 3 innings, giving up 5 hits and 5 runs.

Martinez was named to the All-Tournament team. She had a 3-2 record with a 0.79 ERA in 26.2 innings pitched. She struck out 31 batters and tossed 3 complete games, including 2 shutouts.

Martinez hit .278 in 18 at bats. She scored 2 runs and had 5 hits to go along with 2 RBIs.

Ten players were named to the All-Tournament team. Martinez was the only player from the silver bracket to make the team.

MT hosted a doubleheader with Western Illinois in just the second home game of the year yesterday. ♦

Baseball team drops game 11-6 at Tech

By Kevin Rose
Staff Writer

There is an old saying in baseball - defense wins games. That saying was very evident Monday afternoon in Cookeville.

Middle Tennessee (8-4) committed 6 errors that allowed Tennessee Tech (6-8) to take an 11-6 win over the Blue Raiders. Tech committed no errors. This comes a day after the Blue Raiders committed 6 errors at home to defeat Tech 8-7.

Four errors in the bottom of the second inning lead to 3 Golden Eagle runs. Tech added 2 more runs in the bottom of third to take a 7-0 lead against MT. Starting pitcher Adam Larson lasted 7 innings, giving up 8 runs, 5 earned on 15 hits in taking the loss. Larson dropped to 1-1 on the season.

The big start spoiled a chance for the two-game series sweep over the Golden Eagles.

The Blue Raiders mounted a comeback during the middle innings by scoring 3 runs in the top of the fourth and 2 in the fifth. The 3-run fourth was highlighted by a Marshall Nisbett home run. The home run was his team-leading fourth of the season. It also extended his hitting streak to nine games. Chuck Akers added a RBI double in the inning. Tech added a run in the bottom of the fourth.

In the fifth inning, Nisbett struck again, this time with a single. Back to back RBI doubles by Josh Archer and Brett Carroll closed the lead to 8-5.

Tech added 3 insurance runs in the bottom of the eighth, and the Blue Raiders could come no closer. The Raiders added a run in the ninth but could not muster anything else against Tech reliever Doug Vincent.

Vincent (11-0) pitched 4 1/3 innings of relief to get the win. He gave up 1 earned run on 3 hits while striking out 5 Blue Raider hitters. David Jackson started for the Golden Eagles but only lasted 4 2/3 innings, allowing 5 earned runs on 7 hits.

MT right fielder Nisbett recorded the last 3 outs by striking out 2. Nisbett was seeking his first action on the mound for the Blue Raiders.

Nisbett and Archer lead the Blue Raider offense with 2 hits apiece. Carroll's lone hit extended his hitting streak to seven games.

MT is playing in Memphis this week for a two-game series against the University of Memphis, with the second game starting today at 3 p.m. The game can be heard on WMTS (88.3).

Over the weekend, the Blue Raiders play Southwest Missouri State in a three-game series at Reese Smith Field Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Start times are 3 p.m., 2 p.m. and 1 p.m., respectively. Saturday's and Sunday's game will be on WMTS (88.3). ♦

Baseball Notebook

By Shane Marquardt
Staff Writer

The Middle Tennessee baseball team split a two-game stint with Lipscomb to improve their record to 7-3. They will trade hits with two Tennessee rivals in the upcoming week.

Lipscomb series:

It appeared both teams found their bats on the road. MT took one out of Lipscomb with an 18-7 shellacking. But the Bison returned the favor in Murfreesboro when they out-scored the Blue Raiders 18-15. It marked the first home loss of the season for the Blue Raiders.

Despite splitting the series, Marshall Nisbett found plenty of success in the two games against Lipscomb. Nisbett went 7-for-12 at the plate during the series with 6 RBIs and 4 runs scored.

The Road Ahead:

The contest that was to be held Saturday against Tennessee Tech was rained out, so the series reconvened in Murfreesboro. Now the Blue Raiders road show begins. MT will travel to the home of the King, Elvis Presley, to tangle with Memphis in a two-game series. The series began yesterday, with the second game following today.

Take a Look at the Numbers:

Coach Steve Peterson has got plenty of numbers to carry with him. He collected his 600th win against Eastern Michigan and has 447 wins with the MT baseball team. Those numbers put him in first place for all-time wins in Blue Raider history. But Peterson had already taken that record last year. Since then Peterson has been padding his stats. ♦
