7. DESCRIPTION

The Sullivan and Richie Jean Jackson House, built in 1906 and remodeled c. 1960, is a one-story frame bungalow with wide-board siding, a metal pyramid roof and brick and concrete foundation, located at 1416 Lapsley Avenue, Selma, Dallas County, Alabama. Selma's population as of the 2010 US Census was approximately 21,000 people.

Exterior

The facade has four bays, with an off-center entrance having a paneled door (with metal security door, c. 2005) flanked by paneled 9-light side lights. Flanking the entrance is a single 9/1 double-hung sash window and two separate 9/1 double-hung sash windows. Six decorative metal posts, c. 1960, on a solid brick wall, c. 1970, support a large bracketed gable overhang that has a centered square ventilation grill. The porch floor is brick, c. 1970.

The south elevation has five asymmetrical bays, with the 1906 section of the dwelling having a single 9/1 double-hung sash window, a paired set of 9/1 double-hung sash windows, and a small square double-hung sash window that provided light to an interior bathroom. On the addition, c. 1960, there is a centered double-hung sash window while on the den addition, c. 1970, there is a centered 2/2 window and this addition rests on a concrete foundation.

The east (rear) elevation has a centered tripled 2/2 windows, a rear entrance with metal security door c. 2005, and a small square 2/2 window that provides light to a bathroom.

The north elevation has four bays, with two large rectangular windows flanking a centered exterior chimney on the 1906 section, a centered double bay for the dining room, and a single bay for the kitchen, c. 1960.

Interior

The interior floor plan is irregular, typical of bungalows and retains most of its integrity from c. 1960, although some areas have been remodeled in the 1970s and 1990s and carpet has been installed in most rooms, except for the kitchen and bathrooms. Many original five-paneled doors, transoms, and baseboards exist from 1906 construction. Remodeling from c. 1960 was sympathetic to the original design and these alterations are concurrent with the building's period of significance during the Civil Rights Movement.

The entrance opens into a large formal parlor, which was remodeled on its north end with a new fireplace, topped by a mirror, and brick wall inserts, c. 1960. This room contains several antique pieces of furniture along with furniture used by Dr. King and SCLC staff in the 1960s. At its southeast corner is a original paneled wood door with transom that leads into the rear hallway to a bedroom, an office, a master bedroom, and a second bathroom.

To the south of the entrance is a large guest bedroom, which is entered through an original five-paneled door with transom. The guest bedroom has a stained plywood storage unit installed into its northwest corner.

An original five-paneled door with transom leads into the second guest bedroom; which retains its historic wood mantel, c. 1906 and has an original five paneled wood door in its southwest corner that provides access to a closet.

Across the hallway from the second guest bedroom is a five-paneled wood door with transom that leads into the dining room. A set of double French doors connects the dining room to the living rooms, and a passageway in the northeast corner of the room provides access to the kitchen.

The kitchen is an irregular shaped room and it was remodeled c. 1960. There are four primary components to this space: a storage nook, the stove, a set of cabinets, c. 1960, and an open pantry for storage. The room has wood wainscoting, installed c. 1960.

The oldest bathroom retains its appearance from c. 1960, with tile wainscoting and floors and fixtures from that era.

Across from the bathroom is a space remodeled c. 1960 into new rooms. An original exterior eight-light fixed window, from the now enclosed original rear porch, provides light into a bedroom (the daughter's room), c. 1960. Adjacent is the family office, c. 1960. To the south of the office is the master bedroom, c. 1960, which also has an attached modern bath, with facilities dating c. 1970.

At the rear of the house, below the grade of the original building is the large rectangular shaped den, c. 1970. You must step down from either the master bedroom or the rear hallway to enter the den. The bar is in the southwest corner of the room. The walls are faux pine paneling. A rear door leads into the property's backyard.

Hyphened to this south elevation is an open gable roof garage, with a south concrete block wall and three square metal posts on the north side which opens into a shed-roof carport, c. 1970. (NC, date of construction).

One unattached outbuilding had an asphalt shingle flat roof two-car open frame garage with a concrete foundation that has a small storage unit as part of its east end. Built c. 1980, this outbuilding is non-contributing due to the date of construction. (NC, date of construction)

8. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Sullivan and Richie Jean Jackson House at 1416 Lapsley Avenue in Selma, Dallas County, Alabama is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places for its local significance under Criterion A, Social History and Ethnic Identity: African American. The building was a strategy center for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) during the Selma Civil Rights Movement, 1958-1965. It meets the Registration Requirements for a strategy center as outlined in the Civil Rights Movement in Selma, Alabama, 1865-1972 Multiple Property Submission.

Built in 1906 as a wedding present from Dr. Richard B. Hudson, a significant turn-of-the-century education leader who lived next door, for his daughter, Leola Hudson, the dwelling has long been associated with middle-class black professionals in the city. Leola Hudson Whitted and Dr. William Whitted, a Selma dentist, were the first residents. After the death of Dr. Whitted, Leola Hudson Whitted moved to Montgomery and leased the dwelling to Dr. E. F. Portlock, who moved to Selma to take over the dentist needs of the black community.<sup>1</sup> He served for decades, with Marie Foster, a Selma native serving as his dental hygienist in the post-war period. Foster is a significant leader in the Civil Rights Movement in Selma from the 1950s to the 1960s.<sup>2</sup>

Dr. Sullivan Jackson, Foster's brother, assumed Portlock's practice c. 1957 and moved into the house with his new bride Richie Jean Sherrod Jackson in 1958, initially sharing the dwelling with Mrs. Portlock until the latter moved to family in Florence, Alabama.<sup>3</sup> Sullivan Jackson was a World War II veteran and took his undergraduate degree from West Virginia State College (now West Virginia State University) and then his medical degree in dentistry from Meharry Medical School in Nashville.<sup>4</sup>

The Sullivans had family and professional ties to leading African American Baptist ministers, especially The Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and Dr. Ralph Abernathy, both pastoring in Montgomery in the late 1950s and both among the founders of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Dr. King and Rev. Abernathy typically stayed at the Jackson House whenever they visited Selma for meetings and conferences at Selma University or for the Alabama Baptist State Convention. Richie Jean Sherrod Jackson notes: "from 1958 until 1965 Martin was in and out of the house," often traveling with Abernathy.<sup>5</sup> Once the SCLC launched its Selma campaign in the winter of 1965, the Jackson House "was a hub of activity. There were always reporters, movement staff, and others who wanted to meet or just see the icon staying at the house."<sup>6</sup> Historian Taylor

Branch sums up the personal ties that bound together these black professionals. He relates of the story of the day before the first mass meeting in 1965 when “King and Abernathy pulled into the driveway of their Selma hosts, Sullivan and Jean Jackson”:

The four friends shared many ties. Jean Jackson’s great-aunt, Ethel Dinkins, had been Coretta King’s childhood music teacher; her best friend had married Ralph Abernathy’s college roommate, Rev. Howard Creecy, and she had grown up with Juanita Abernathy. Her husband, Sullivan—‘Sully’ to King and Abernathy—had testified with Sam Boynton at the 1958 federal hearings on the exclusion of professional Negroes from the Selma voting roles.<sup>7</sup>

The Jackson house became a safe haven for Dr. King, what his biographer called a “domestic refuge, . . . where he knew he would find the small guest bedroom stocked for him Jackson’s spare clothes in his size, including suits and underwear, plus matching pajamas a twin bed for his movement companion, Rev. Ralph Abernathy.”<sup>8</sup> Being prepared for the visits of Dr. King and Rev. Abernathy was a quiet contribution made to the Civil Rights Movement by the Jacksons.

As events and people multiplied in Selma in the winter of 1965, SCLC staffer Bernard Lee became a regular member of the household since Lee managed King’s affairs. “He would take phone calls, relay the messages, decide who could see Martin, and who could not. Bernard would gather and pack his cloths, and make sure his travel was done on time. Bernard really took some of the pressure off of me [Jean Jackson] as it pertained to Martin’s personal matters.”<sup>9</sup> Reporters and photographers particularly became a nuisance.

In February, for example, the Jackson House served as the location for a lunch and then strategy meeting between Dr. King, SCLC staff, and visiting U.S. Congressmen. After the shooting of Jimmy Lee Jackson in Marion in February 1965, Rev. C. T. Vivian spoke SCLC staff to the Jackson House where they called Dr. King “and they all went into an immediate strategy session to determine the next step. There were decisions to be made about how the events of the night could be turned to a good purpose and used to reveal the depth of the hatred and lawlessness we faced. People were going in and out of the house, keeping track of those taken to the hospital.”<sup>10</sup> When Dr. King arrived back at the Jackson House after Jackson’s shooting, Sullivan Jackson arranged a meeting with Father Maurice Quellet of St. Elizabeth’s Mission who gave King a large donation from local Catholics.<sup>11</sup> Other local activists, such as Rev. Frederick D. Reese and J. L. Chesnut, also attended strategy meetings here.<sup>12</sup>

When King and Abernathy were elsewhere that spring, Rev. Andrew Young led the strategy sessions that occurred at the Jackson House. Other prominent Civil Rights leaders involved were Rev. Joseph E. Lowery, Rev. Nelson H. Smith, Rev. A. D. King, Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, James Bevel, and Hosea Williams associated with SCLC and John Lewis and Bernard Lafayette from the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee. Before the march on Montgomery, Assistant Attorney General John Doar came to the house early on March 9 and, despite Mrs. Jackson's protests, demanded in the name of the President an opportunity to discuss matters with Dr. King. The Doar meeting may have been the most momentous one at the dwelling. Historian Taylor Branch has detailed the gathering in his book On Canaan's Edge:

King and Ralph Abernathy stumbled into the living room in Dr. Jackson's matching burgundy pajamas, followed by colleagues who had been trying to sleep on sofas, rugs, and even in the tub of the bathroom, which James Bevel called his crisis 'suite' since the forced separation from his wife ten days earlier. King's inner circle had endured the night of emergency bulletins and fierce internal debate . . . Now groggy but gravely composed, King sat at the dining room table to hear John Doar disclose that U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson indeed was signing a federal court to prohibit another voting rights march from Selma until further notice.<sup>13</sup>

While not surprising the news still staggered King and the SCLC leadership. He tried to argue with Doar, but to no avail. Judge Johnson wanted tensions to calm, and as Doar repeatedly said across the table it was a federal injunction, something that King nor the SCLC had ever violated. Florida Governor LeRoy Collins, who was there as a representative of the President, added that Bloody Sunday had disgraced the country in the eyes of the world, and the President did not want any more of that. Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth replied: go talk to Wallace and Clark, "They're the ones in the disgrace business."<sup>14</sup> Gov. Collins then offered a compromise—what if the demonstrators crossed the bridge but then turned around and headed back to Selma—that should not violate the federal injunction. Talk of a compromise unsettled Doar and the Justice Department representatives; they soon left the house. Governor Collins left later—what he and the SCLC leadership discussed is not known in full—but Collins next met with Colonel Al Lingo of the state troopers, who were already massed on the Montgomery side of Edmund Pettus bridge.<sup>15</sup> The result of the discussions at the Jackson house that morning proved to be "Turnaround Tuesday," a key event leading to the March to Montgomery.

During those difficult weeks of 1965 Richie Jean Jackson also routed calls from President Lyndon Baines Johnson to Dr. King. After Bloody Sunday, the Federal Bureau of Investigation posted an agent at the Jackson House to help provide security. Before the March to Montgomery, the house remained a key center; Dr. Ralph Bunche, a Nobel prize and labor leader Walter Reuther visited during this period.

In the years since the Civil Rights Movement changed Selma and a nation, Sullivan and Jean Jackson “consciously or unconsciously saved items, chosen not to have furniture recovered, all in an unspoken attempt to retain the presence of our friend Martin.” Dr. Sullivan Jackson died in 2004. Jean Jackson adds: “I can walk through any room of this house and in my mind’s eye remember and see activity.”<sup>16</sup>

Visitors then, and today, enter from the rear of the house, and the arrangement of space speaks to how the back—the best way to quietly and safely enter in the days of violence in Selma—actually served as the heart of the dwelling. The back enters into a large den, then comes a bathroom, the kitchen where so much was provided to the civil rights activists by Mrs. Jackson and her friends, the dining room, and finally, at the front of the house, the more formal living room and access to bedrooms; the guest room being the space reserved for Dr. King, Rev. Abernathy, and others. Richie Jean Sherrod Jackson’s memoirs of the house and the momentous events of 1965-1965, The House by the Side of the Road: The Selma Civil Rights Movement (2011), have been an invaluable source for this nomination.
